Poland's Mood Is Downbeat As Solidarity Nears Congress

Posters in Warsaw mark the first anniversary of Solidarity's pact with the government — a year ago in Gdansk on Ang. 31 — and boasts that the union has a following of 10 million.

Soviet War Maneuvers Launched Near Poland

MOSCOW - Soviet land and sea forces, backed by reservists, jets and helicopters, began nine days of maneuvers Friday in the northwestern corner of the Soviet Union, Soviet press reports said. The Soviet accounts did not directly link the maneuvers to Kremlin concern-over internal developments in Poland, which adjoins the two Soviet military districts where the war sames are taking place. Poland's Solidarity union, which has been sharply denounced by Moscow, opens a national cons gress in the city of Gdansk on Sat-midsy. The news reports stressed instead the alleged military danger to the Soviet Union from the United States and other NATO nations, and said the Soviet armed forces must be ready to repel any encroachment" against the Soviet Union's own territory.

North' vs. 'South' .

The Soviet Umon has not revealed how many troops are taking part in the exercise, in which opposing forces have been dubbed the "North" and the "South."

The 1975 Helsinki agreements require advance notification of troop strength if exercises involve more than 25,000 soldiers or are near European national boundaries. Western diplomats in Moscow are seeking clarification of how many soldiers are actually involved but have so far received no answer from the Soviet Foreign Ministry, diplomatic sources said. Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri

F. Ustinov is commanding the war games, which are believed to include about 60 Soviet vessels in the naval contingent.

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia revealed Friday that the maneuvers would start in the Belorussian military district in the western part of the Soviet Union, presumably moving later to encompass the Soviet Baltic republics of Latvia, Lithuania and Esto-

'Nothing Extraordinary'

Izvestia had said on Thursday that the maneuvers "were planned many months ago" to bolster Soviet combat readiness and that there is nothing extraordinary in them."

Accounts of the war games so far have spoken mainly of tank, infantry and air maneuvering. In a Friday report, the Soviet Army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) said Soviet soldiers and domestic and the foreign policy of the commanders of the Leninist party, which purpose navy and air force.

Attack by Prague

PRAGUE (AP) - Solidarity is finishing preparations to seize power in Poland, the Czechoslovak Communist Party newspaper Rude

Pravo charged Friday.

Everything now indicates that preparations for the taking over of power are now culminating in the Solidarity leadership," the paper said on the eve of Solidarity's first national congress. "There is not the least doubt that counterrevolution has raised its head high in Poland," it added. It was one of the most serious Soviet-bloc attacks yet launched against the Polish or-

Junta in Bolivia Appoints General As New President

The Associated Press

LA PAZ - Bolivia's three-man military junta Friday named one of its own, army commander Gen. Celso Torrelio, as president to replace Gen. Luis García Meza, who resigned under pressure Aug. 4, it was announced.

Gen. Torrelio's appointment came after three days of negotiations within the armed forces and was unanimously approved, said Gen. Waldo Bernal, commander of the Bolivian Air Force and senior member of the junta, in announcing the appointment.

The 48-year-old Mr. Torrelio, army commander-in-chief and a member of the junta, was to be inaugurated Friday afternoon to form this country's 191st government since it gained independence from Spain in 1825. The other two junta members apparently will return to military duty, leaving Gen. Torrelio in full command of the government.

Gen. Garcia Meza, 52, seized power in July, 1980, from a civilian government and survived four coup attempts. But a fifth military revolt in August forced him to resign in favor of the junta made up of the commanders of the army, By John Damton New York Times Service

GDANSK, Poland Trzcinski, a Solidarity leader who was in it all from the very beginning and now spends a great deal of time traveling around the country listening to angry complaints and rising words of militancy, shrugged his shoulders inside his black leather jacket and did not wen bother to turn around.

Behind him were a bed of posies belonging to the fading grand ho-tel, a stretch of deserted beach, the lapping waves, and then, out in the Bartic somewhere, presumably Soviet warships moving back and forth through the dense fog. The vessels are engaging in large-scale Soviet land and sea maneuvers. perhaps the largest in the region since the end of World War II. The exercises began Friday, perhaps not coincidentally, the day before Solidarity's first national congress

If blackmail or psychological pressure is the intent — and if Jurek is any example — the exercises are failing in their objective. "We are accustomed to it," he said. "They threaten us all the time. Last December. Last March. We no longer pay any attention to it. It's like the police. We notice there are more on the streets today, but we don't attach too much

Another shrug, and be turned to what many unionists consider the real issue at hand. "The point is," he said, "the government is not living up to the Gdansk agreement." That accounted for a lot of things, he added, including growing impa-tience in the ranks of the union, the growing popularity of extremist nonunion groups in the industrial South and a growing frustration among Poles in general, Solidarity is approaching the congress in something of a downbeat mood, with the realization that even revolution takes time. It was captured in an editorial in the first issue of Free Voice, the special daily congress newspa-per. The bopes that we all at-tached one year ago to the creation of Solidarity have been shaken," it. said. What in August appeared to be the crowning of the great workers' protest already shortly after-wards was shown to be just the beginning of the road."

Multiple Purpose

All the same, the congress is an-Europe. When some of 912 union delegates from around the country assemble Saturday morning, it will be the first such assembly not sponsored or stage-managed by the Communist Party.

The purpose of the congress is multiple. The union will elect its leadership, revise its statutes, and hammer out positions on major issues from economie reform to whether or not to advocate totally free elections for national bodies like parliament. Most of the important decisions will be taken during a second phase of the congress, at the end of September.

Lech Walesa, the charismatie national leader, is certain to be reelected as chairman. He is so strong that no one seems prepared to really challenge him openly, although for the first time, criticism of him being high-handed or autocratic or overly moderate can be occasionally beard in the back cor-

The congress opens amid a general perception on the part of many Poles that Solidarity has often opposed the government on specific issues but has yet to come up with a comprehensive program of its own to overcome Poland's economic catastrophe. There is also a sense among many union members that, for all the drama and danger of various confrontations over the past year, little has actually been won from the gov-

French Ambassador in Lebanon Assassinated by Unknown Gunmen

By John Kifner

New York Times Service BEIRUT — The French ambas-sador to Lebanon, Louis De-lamare, was shot to death Friday afternoon as be drove to his official residence near the rubblestrewn no-man's land that divides this embattled city.

Four unknown gunmen in an automobile suddenly pulled in front of the ambassador's car, police said, and jumped out, surrounding the embassy car and grabbing its door handles.
It had all the earmarkings of a kidnapping — a not uncommon occurence in Beirut — but the doors were securely locked and the gunmen could not budge them.

Then, the assailants opened fire with submachine guns through the closed rear window, riddling the car and putting seven bullets into the 59-year-old diplomat's bead, chest and stomach, the police said.

Shooting Is Condenmed.

Speculation on Attack

The controversial meeting of French Minister of External Relations Claude Cheysson with Mr. Arafat in Beirut last-Sunday suggested to some observers here that Mr. Delamare was the target of a group opposed to the Palestinian cause or, conversely, opposed to the mainstream tendency of Mr. Arafat's el-Fatah organization.

But the most common line of speculation in Beirut focused on supporters of the Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. This view holds that the ayatollah's supporters struck at France because it had provided sanctuary to former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and other encmies of the revolutionary regime, including the royalist military men who recently hijacked a French-built Iranian Navy missile ship.

Friday's shooting occurred as the ambassador, accompanied only by his driver, was heading toward his residence at the edge of pre-dominantly Moslem west Beirut, in a once fashionable area near a racetrack, the parliament and the

600 Sadat Foes Seized in 2-Day Police Sweep

By William Farrell

New York Times Service
CAIRO — At least 600 critics of the policies of President Anwar Sadat were arrested during the last 48 hours in a sweep by police that stunned Egyptians and triggered several protests Friday at Cairo

Those arrested include Moslem fundamentalists, Coptic Christian clergymen, politicians, journalists and lawyers.

The ostensible reason for the arrests was to curb what the govern-ment-controlled press calls "sectarian sedition." During the first round of arrests

Thursday, the emphasis was that people were being detained who had been involved in the Copt-Moslem clashes that erupted in a Cairo shum last June in which as many as 60 persons died.

But the names of some of those arrested in the latest arrests are not persons known for religious involvements, although they are known for being outspoken critics of Mr. Sadat's government.

Heikal Seized

Two examples are Mohammed Hassanin Heikal, a prominent journalist who was a major power during the rule of Gamal Abdel Nasser but who has long been at odds with Mr. Sadat, and Ahmed Khawaga, who was removed re-cently as head of the Egyptian Bar Association because he opposes Egypt's peace treaty with Israel.

In addition to the arrests, the government has shut six publications — two of them Coptic, two Moslem magazines, the newspaper of the Opposition Socialist Labor Party and the organ of the funda-mentalist Moslem Brotherhood.

The official press in Cairo said Friday that Mr. Sadat will explain his moves in a major speech before the Egyptian parliament on Satur-day night. There is confusion and puzzlement in official and diplomatic circles at the scope of the arrests since the general assessment is that Mr. Sadat is secure in office and that the opponents of his regime are more nettlesome than

Sadat's Speech

The semi-official newspaper Al Ahram said Friday that Mr. Sadat's speech would deal with five specific points. They are:

The Moslem and Christian "extremist and fanatic religious elements" whom he believes engaged in seditious acts such as the June elasbes between Copts and position towards the regime and tried to create troubles by deepening sectarian sedition.

 Politicians who wanted to "settle old scores" by "kindling the flames of sectarian sedition."

• The volatile mix of religion

 And the proposed new legislation to be presented to parliament. The headquarters of one opposi-tion party, the leftist National Unionist Progressive rally - an entity so powerless that it was unable to gain a single sear in the 392-mem-ber parliament — was under armed guard Friday. A statement from the party said its offices were raided and that police had taken its printing presses, typewriters and pamphlets.

Fundamentalists Protest

Thousands of Moslem fundamentalists gathered Friday, the traditional Moslem hobiday, at the Al Nour mosque in central Cairo. Sheikh Mohammed Ghazala spoke generally aboot "enemies of Islam" and the buge crowd roared time and again, "Allahu Akhbar" (Coding greet) (God is great).

After prayers, thousands of demonstrators, mostly men, but some of them ululating women, be-gan a march toward Cairo's main Coptic cathedral, St. Mark's. The area was heavily ringed with mili-tary vehicles and the demonstrators were dispersed when riot police fired tear gas into the throngs.

A quieter protest took place at the mosque presided over by Sheikh Kishk, a blind religious leader who is very popular here. Sheikh Kishk, an outspoken and constant critic of Mr. Sadat, was among those arrested. But his voice rang through the streets near the mosque when a cassette tape of his sermons was played through a the mosque.

At least seven leading imams of mosques were arrested, along with eight Coptic priests and bishops. Most of the leadership of the opposition Socialist Labor Party, which has about two dozen seats in parliament, were also incarcerated. Observers here said that the government arrests constituted the most severe crackdown since the food riots in Egypt in 1977 in which as many as 70 persons were killed. When the first of the arrests was announced by the Ministry of the Interior on Thursday, no numbers

Exiled Cambodian Leaders Pledge Joint Effort

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

SINGAPORE - Three former Cambodian leaders signed a joint statement Friday pledging their groups to strive for a coalition government to continue the struggle against the Vietnamese occupation of their country. The document was signed by former Premier Khieu Samphan of Pol Pot's deposed regime, former head of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, and one of his former premiers, Son San. This alliance unites Communist forces, a former king who described himself after the signing as "a blue, not a red Cambodian" and a conservative politician who is deeply anti-Communist and broke with Prince Sihanouk, stepping down as premier 14 years ago.

Speaking at a private lunch par-ty that he gave after the signing ceremony in a luxury hotel, Prince Sihanouk said that the surprising coalition came into existence after a long period of Chinese pressure. China, which supports the Khmer Rouge movement, has been urging the prince and Son San since the Vietnamese conquest of Cambodia to throw in their lot with the Pol

200,000 Vietnamese occupation troops and the Cambodian Army that the pro-Hanoi regime has formed, the declaration expressed only an agreement "that all anti-Vietnamese forces avoid any clashes among themselves." Prince Sihanouk said at a news conference that no joint military command is envisaged.

Cambodian military claims are customarily excessive. The Pol Pot movement claims 50,000 troops, Son San, 10 000, and Prince Sihanouk adraits that guerrillas loyal to him fre few.

He explained that the Communists would give up their control only if this was necessary to attract enough votes to retain the UN credentials. Friday's agreement, be said, would insure that result without further gestures.

Referring perhaps to his new lignment with the regime that killed three of his sons and kept him and his wife under house arrest until the Vietnamese invasion liberated them, Prince Sihanouk reminisced over lunch about a meeting he had in 1958 with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. # 'Fedora,' the Trusted Soviet Superspy of the CIA and White House, May Have Betrayed U.S.

By George Lardner Jr.

WASHINGTON - When the Nixon administration was in court a decade ago in an effort to cut off publication of the Pentagon Papers, the White House was told that a complete set of the top-secret documents had been delivrelying upon for years as a trusted counterspy. was, in turn, conveyed directly to the White House, enhancing his position, sources said. There is no question the information would always go to the highest levels," said one expert. "That gave it a great deal of prominence."

Enter Elisberg

By the time of the Pentagon Papers incident in 1971, editor Hurt said in a telephone interview. Fedora was "regarded as a knight in shining armor. And be was telling the FBI, which was telling Nixon, that a copy of the Pentagon Papers had been delivered to the Sotiet Embassy. Nixon & Co. accepted the report without question."

In fact, word of the alleged delivery was quickly published by a conservative columnist with close ues to the White House while the Pentagon Papers case was still before the Suprente Court. Some critics regarded it as a White House effort to influence the court's decision, albeit an unsuccessful one.

In any case, according to a Dec. 9, 1973, New York Times article, Mr. Nixon developed fears, reportedly nourished by his then-national security adviser, Henry A. Kissinger, that Daniel Ellsberg, the man who had leaked the Pentagon Papers to the press, might have provided the Russians with far more important secrets, especially concerning nuclear targeting

Some intelligence officials were reportedly stunned that Fedora's word should be so readily accepted without any further evidence. Skeptics such as CIA counterintelligence chief James J. Angleton had long regarded the Russianes J. Angleton had sian as an agent provocateur. But the White House was not listening.

"This could be a classic case of an agent sowing disruption at the highest levels of government," Mr. Hurt suggested in the interview. Fresh doubts were finally stirred in 1978, primarily about Mr. Nosenko but also about Fedora, with the publication of a book by Edward Jay Epstein called "Legend: The Secret World of Lee Harvey Oswald." It questioned the loyalty of both Russians. Subsequent investigation by the House As-

3d S. African Column Believed Aiding UNITA

LUANDA, Angola — The mission of a South African motorized column that has thrust deep into Angola apparently is to resupply dissidents fighting the Marxist government, Western diplomats

East European sources also said that the column had been spotted in the bush 50 miles (80 kilometers) east of Menongue, capital of Cuando Cubango province, heading into the dusty central plateau that is dotted with the hideouts of Jonas Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA).

The recent fighting in Angola has been concentrated in the south and southwest, but the column believed to be resupplying the anti-Luanda UNITA guerrillas was reported moving up through Cuando Cubango, in the southeast.

The diplomats in Luanda said that, while a third South African column appeared to be transporting supplies to UNITA, the two fighting columns that led South Africa's incursion into Angola last week seemed to be principally simulated at destroying radar installaaimed at destroying radar installations built along Angola's southern border to give advance warning of South African air raids.

In Pretoria on Thursday, a South African Defense Ministry spokesman described earlier reports of the third column in the east as "ridiculous propaganda."

The Western diplomats said the third column was keeping away from the few roads in the area, crossing about 200 miles of rug-ged, sandy savannah from the border with South African-ruled South-West Africa (Namibia).

Meanwhile, Sam Nujoma, leader of the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), denied at a news conference in Luanda that his guerrillas received any instruction from Soviet advisers in their fight for Namibian independence.

Commenting on South Africa's claims to have captured a Soviet soldier and killed two Soviet officers during an attack on SWAPO bases in Angola, Mr. Nujoma, who had just returned from an East European tour, said, "SWAPO does not have any military bases in Angola, let alone Soviet personnel in its ranks."

Mr. Nujoma also said the Namibians in Angola were refugees who had been given political asylum. He said be had no information on Namibian casualties in the twoweek South African incursion.

Angola's only newspaper, the of-ficial Jornal de Angola, said Fri-day that South Africa was prolong-ing its occupation of the southern part of the country to "create the minimum conditions for the territorial Balkanisation of Angola and the installation of its puppets in the occupied zone." # U.S. Plans a 15% Cut In '82 Wheat Planting

By Seth S. King New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - In an abrupt reversal of his previous position, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block has announced that he is planning to order a 15-percent re-duction in 1982 wheat planting. Mr. Block said Thursday that the administration was reducing wheat planting in hopes of checking the continuing decline in current wheat prices.

The secretary's action could also hold down the cost of subsidies to wheat farmers a year from now. The summerlong decline in farmers prices for the 1981 crop was already expected to cost the tax-payers between $250 million and $500 million in subsidy payments on the 1981 wheat crop.

Until Thursday, Mr. Block had been stating, without qualification. that be planned no planting restrictions of any kind on next year's grain crops.

'Good Prices'

When asked wby he had changed his mind, Mr. Block replied: "I'm still philosophically opposed to restricting plantings of any crop. But I believe in good prices for farmers even more strongly. We've had a record wheat crop this year and wheat production is up in most of the rest of the world, too. I just hope that this ac-tion will steady today's wheat prices or improve them some."

The amount of wheat on hand next June, when the 1982 harvest begins, is expected to exceed one billion bushels, the largest carry-over since 1977. This prospect has forced farmers' prices down until, by the end of August, prices reached an average of $3.63 a bushel. This compares with $3.94 a year ago.

BRUSSELS — NATO govern ments have completed a study of the nuclear arms balance in Europe prior to the U.S.-Soviet disarsels said on Friday.

The two-part review covers the Soviet nuclear systems targeted on Western Europe and NATO requirements for tactical weapons to balance them, he said.

These findings — details of which are secret — will provide the basis for a U.S. negotiating position in the talks. U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is scheduled to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko later this month to arrange the talks, which are ex-pected to start in late November, They will cover NATO plans to deploy U.S.-made missiles in Europe and the Soviet medium-range missiles targeted on Europe.

The U.S. official, who asked not be identified, told reporters that NATO governments were unanimous in agreeing on the alliance's minimum needs for theater nuclear weapons. Diplomats said that protest movements in Europe apparently had not modified military assessments by NATO member governments. To inform Western public opinion about Soviet military capabili-ty, the U.S. official said, the Reagan administration intends to publish a study later this month providing new statistics about the whole range of Soviet weaponry. "It will be the most massive declassification of current intelligence in U.S. history." the official said.

Low Priority

Prof. Herbert York of the University of California, San Diego, who was the U.S. negotiator for a comprehensive less ban treaty until the talks were suspended in November, said that the toughening of American policy "did not take place in a vacuum," and he pointed to events in Iran and Afghanistan. Nonetheless, he said there was a perception in the Pugwash group that the administration was "not sufficiently informed about or interested in disarmament questions and had placed a relatively low priority on them. The group expressed particular concern over the threatened arms buildup in Europe and said "it is essential that serious negotiations on limiting nuclear weapons in Europe begin soon before it is too late to set low limits,"

But when proposals were made to dismantle the Soviet SS-20 missile system in exchange for a U.S. pledge not to deploy Pershing-2 and Cruise missiles in Europe, the Soviet participants resisted this as unhalanced.

Mr. Weinberger said the administration was committed to increasing the military budget but keeping it to a smaller portion of the gross national product than it was in the 1950s and avoiding "excess unnecessary spending."

The officials said Mr. Carlucci showed Mr. Meese alternatives to cutting the proposed budgets, and the potential military, political and diplomatic effects of each.

Similarly, Mr. Carlucci reportor cut out a new nuclear-powered aircraft carrier and escort vessels that it had planned as part of its expansion from 450 ships to 600 ships. They also said Mr. Carlucci told Mr. Meese that a more immediate saving could be achieved by holding down proposed increases in military salaries. But the deputy defense secretary reportedly noted that this would be a setback to the military's efforts to solve its manpower problems.

Reagan Returns From Vacation Appearing Less Than Invincible

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - A month ago, President Reagan headed westward on vacation, riding the crest of big legislative victories, seeming almost politically invincible with the main pillars of his economic recovery program in place.

His return to the capital Thursday after his California sojourn was far less triumphant. He arrived by way of Chicago, where he faced a tough union audience, endeavoring to explain away Wall Street's akeptical plunge over high interest rates and the prospect of inflationary budget deficits, under pressure to pull back from his own ambitious military buildup and confronting a tougher political cli-

tration into two other delicate

White House officials acknowledge that the economic situation is more precarious than they had anticipated, but they contend that the president still has strong public support and a chance to seize the litical initiative and overcome his present difficulties.

The press and the markets have been more negative in the last few weeks, but I think the president has the political capital in the country to get done what he wants," said David R. Gergen, the White House communications director. "His basic commitments have not changed, but he may have to make some adjustments at the margins.

More Budget Cuts

Already, Wall Street's skepti-cism about the difficulty of holding the 1982 budget deficit below billion has forced a presidential decision to go back to Congress later this month for more budget cuts. Administration officials say that something like $10 billion more must be cut from the 1982 outlay figures, mostly from nonmilitary programs.

Aside from the political embarrassment of having to back off from its earlier optimism, the White House now faces the unpalatable task of offending conservatives who ardently backed the ambitious Reagan military buildup and moderates who complain at ana Democrat who has heretofore the thought of cutting any more backed much of the Reagan pro-from social programs. Yet the president and his sides feel they

The roots of the president's po-litical predicament lie in his 1980 campaign pledges to enact big tax cuts to spur economic growth, to "rearm America" with huge mili-tary spending increases and to hal-ance the budget by 1984. His suc-cess in enacting the 25-percent cut in individual tax rates has left Wall Street jittery about the inflationary potential of that move and forced Mr. Reagan to choose between balancing the budget and reducing the size of his military buildup.

Arguing Starts

Even before Congress returns next week, the administration has started arguing over the military spending issue. White House officials and David A. Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, talk about taking roughly $30 billion out of the planned growth of military spending in 1983 and 1984. But Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger insists he has not had "any indica-tion there will be any" big reduc-tions in the defense budget.

Ultimately, other administration officials and congressional leaders contend, any oew round of cuts will have to include the Pentagon of oecessity. Moreover, they say, this is the only way the president can hope to win support from moderates for commilitary cuts.

In the spring and summer, the president's success stemmed from his ability to win the support of both the Southern breakaway Democratic conservatives and the Northern moderate Republicans. This fall, he may find the conservative Democrats easier to hold than the Republican moderates.

Rep. Charles W. Stenholm of Texas, leader of the conservative Democrats, said he thinks the hard core of his group would go along with another $10 billion in budget cuts. But Northern Republicans like Rep. Carl D. Pursell of Michi-William Green of New York and Lawrence J. DeNardis of Connecticut sound almost rebellious about further cuts.

Mr. Waugh was five years older than his late brother, Evelyn. He wrote his first novel, "The Loom of Youth," in 61/2 weeks while he was in the military. It was published in 1917, when he was 19 and overseas in World War I. In 1918, he spent eight months as a German prisoner of war. He later re-ferred to his alma mater as "The University of Mainz," the location of the prison camp. His best-known novel, "Island in the Sun," a story of love, murder and political intrigue on an imaginary Caribbean island was a book-club selection, condensed in The Reader's Digest and was made into a film that starred James Mason, Joan Fontaine, Harry Belafonte, Joan Collins and Dorothy Dandridge.

"I made more in one month with 'Island in the Sun' than I did in 40 years of writing with about 38 books and countless stories," Mr. Wangh said.

The money enabled him to live the sort of life that intrigued him from the time he left school at 17 to join the army. He traveled the world, saying he managed to see his three children "three or four times a year." Lor Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — As the "emergency" phase of the air traffic controllers' strike ends, U.S. travelers can look forward to fixed, predictable schedules once more but also to a wide range of unhappy side effects and higher costs. The same will be true for pilots and other airline employees, for the financially strapped airline industry, for geoeral aviation, and thousands of others whose well-being is linked to air travel. Next Wednesday, when the Federal Aviaunn Administracion inaugurates its new, scaled-down system for handling air traffic without the services of about 12,000 striking cootrollers, commercial airliners will operate on firm schedules for the first time since the walkout began a month ago.

Higher Fares

Flights will not be canceled, delayed or juggled on a day-by-day basis, FAA officials say. The oew system is designed to function without such constant adjusting through at least next April.

There will be fewer flights, however, and many will be at less convenient times. Average fares will be higher, and there will be a reduction in the "fare wars" between established airlines and their new

Thousands of airline employees will face pay cuts or layoffs — in fact, during the first four weeks of the strike, more than 14,000 workers were laid off. The airlines will continue to lose millions of dollars each day and landing fees will shrink for state and city-owned air-

It is too early to tell whether the shrunken air travel system represents the shape of things to come in the long term, government and private analysts agree.

But, whatever the long-term consequences, unless the administration unexpectedly changes its position, the air travel system will be substantially curtailed for the next year or so.

Small Effect Seen

Not all the effects of curtailment will be bad for everyone, Air freight shipments apparently will be almost unaffected. And some analysts insist that the strike will help get the "fat" out of a moneylosing industry.

Also, a staff study hy the Com-merce Department's Bureau of Industrial Economics has concluded that for the nadon's overall economy "the effect ... is oot likely to be great."
For their part, the airlines were suffering from the business downturn even before the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organizatioo struck oo Aug. 3, although the walkout initially added to their revenue losses by up to $30 million

The subsequent directive from the FAA to redoce flights gave airlines a chance to drop their "losers" without fear that competitors could step in and expand their flights to gain a bigger share of the

Rush Hours Avoided

Overall, the number of flights is going down by about 25 percent, with the major impact on the 22 biggest airports in the nation. The change is going to end the morning and evening rush hours at these airports hy requiring passengers to fly later or earlier than they normally would prefer to do, accord-ing to William Jackman, spokes-man for the Air Transport Associ-

Meanwhile, Back at the Economy

It's a good thing President Reagan had a long California vacation back at the ranch. He'll need all the energy and imagination he can muster for the economie battle just

He looked far more heroic when he left Washington. He had won handily in Congress on tax and budget policy. For a brief, euphoric moment many thought that maybe the nation had finally found a way out of stagflation. Wrong, alas.

No one expected that in merely four weeks the economy would start to grow smartly or inflation would plummet. What hardly anyone expected was that the financial markets would react so oegatively to the oewly enacted Reagan program. But they have.

The stock market is in a dive. loterest rates are breaking records. The long-term bond market is so pessimistic that even companies with the highest credit ratings must pay 17 percent to borrow money. If things don't improve soon, Mr. Reagan's advisers warn, the administration's hopes for a recovery, and lowered inflation, may be dashed.

So begins Phase 2 of the president's economie program. It will include, after all, a hard look at the military budget, not to mention scratching for more cuts in social spending. The White House has also decided oo a rhetorical change: No more mention of when the budget will be balanced. The goal oow is to move toward a balanced budget.

While such chaoges are realistic, they are not likely to boost morale oo Wall Street, where changes in economic policy are viewed with alarm. Yet Phase 2 should come as no surprise to the financial world. Who, after all, really believed that Mr. Reagan could cut taxes, control inflation and beef up military spending all at once?

The president's current economic problems make Rubik's Cube look easy. He is committed to oversized and poorly targeted tax cuts for the next three years and must find spending cuts to accompany them. Wall Street translates this into more big deficits, and more inflation. The gloom is intensified by Republican ambitions to win control of the House of Representatives in 1982 tempting the president to put a little more zip into the economy to help at the ballot

Mr. Reagan says the financial world doesn't understand his policy. He might be right. What looms ahead may not be an inflationary boom but a deflationary recession especially if the Federal Reserve cootinues to hold a tight rein on money and credit.

It would be oo grand achievement to cut inflation by running the nation through a long and painful recession. Richard M. Nixon, Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter all knew how to do that. A recessioo is oot the economie magic Ronald Reagan has promised or has been working for.

The task for policy is to get rid of inflation while promoting economic growth. As Phase 2 begins, that task looks harder than ever. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Recipe for National Character

A natioo's attitude toward food and drink is one of the better indications of its collective character. The dishes and beverages that please the national palate tell you more about the people than just what combination of proteins, carbohydrates and starches it takes to get their enzymes flowing. A smell of wurst and a sip of beer can conjure up a whole German gestalt. And the words "pasta" and "scampi" tell you something about the Italian soul.

The European nation that is most identified with food and drink is, of course, France. Every Frenchman, the folk wisdom has it - more or less accurately - is a gourmand, a lover and prodigious consumer of carefully prepared culinary and enological delights. Nothing, with the possible exception of his summer vacation, makes a Frenchman happier than a good meal, whether the cuisine is bourgeoise or nouvelle, Périgourdine or Lyonnaise.

Good cooking has long been a major French cultural export. And for that, the world is grateful. The terms of trade have been fair. But France is not only a processor of food, it is also Western Europe's largest primary producer. And anyone who has ever tasted a fresh peach from the Ardèche or or a delectably cooked coeur de Charolais will not argue about the quality. Arguments have arisen, however, when France's neighbors, including Commoo Market partners, have tried to compete for access to the French palate.

French farmers have reacted to imports of Italian wine and Spanish fruit with anger and violence, and the government has done little to restrain them. This summer, a tankerload of wine was ruined when diesel fuel was poured into it. Trucks filled with fruit frequently have been overturned on the roads of southern France. And last year, Paris defied the European Economic Community Commission by illegally banning imports of British lamb.

All of that may have more to do with business and politics than it does with food. But a country's style of doing business and practicing politics might also, if its government and citizens are not careful, be scrutinized each other. In their only recent joint appear-

MXing the Medfly, and Other Overkill

. By Meg Greenfield

WASHINGTON — A handful of Medflies turned up in Los Angeles last Three had already been sighted in Florida. Oakland was next. Official planes and choppers took to the air to combat the dread, clusive foe.

I am aware that this combat involves aerial spraying, not aerial dogfights of the late-night-movie, Battle-of-Britain kind. But I can't help it: Each time a newscast or wire service story reveals that our aircraft have once again scrambled, my mind at once fills with Spitfire images, encounters between a madly maneuvering fruit fly and a madly maneuvering fighter plane — rat-a-tat-tat gunfire, gushing black smoke and one of them spiraling crazily toward earth.

Mostly I am waiting for word that the B52s have joined the fray — it can only he a matter of time. "We had to destroy California to save it," an expressionless spokesman will tell us on the 6 o'clock news one night. we will sigh, "these things hap-

Symbol of Decade

I will leave the argument over pesticides, alternative measures and who should have done what when to the experts. My sole intention here is to nominate the Mediterranean fruit fly as symbol of the year — or perhaps of the decade. It is the perfect em-bodiment of our assorted miseries and dilemmas, an ideal candidate for Miss National Torment of 1981. For as a representative problem, the Medily has it all:

(1) It is a serious and genuine problem that needs to be dealt with, but (2) there is something wrong with each of the ways of dealing with it, something that involves not just certain costs and disadvantages but also (3) uncertainty as to wbether the remedy will even work in the long run, as it seems to be once again (4) a too-cumbersome and too-elever technological solution, a kind of over-kill that doesn't kill what you want to kill at all, another of our impressive, giant engines

This is oo doubt what has filled my head with images of mismatched weapoury and whining insects outsmarting all manner of electronic gear. But I have something more also describes the familiar relationship of the has been unusually faithful to its pre-elec-hard-case social or economic problem to the massive machinery government assembles to overcome it — machinery that in its ponderous way seems often to "solve" the prob-lem at hand by reducing the whole terrain in which it exists to rubble.

The controversies going on about government regulation, whether for the purpose of protecting health or preventing an injustice or furthering some other generally accepted national goal, owe much to this skewed relationship. So does the widespread public impulse to revoke or let die legislation that has come to seem overreaching and excessive in relation to the amount of good it does. And so — in another realm — do the doubts now being expressed by some of the hawkiest of the hawks concerning the potential usefulness of certain superweapons the president is being urged to build.

Mr. Reagan came to office with a pretty clear and well-known view of this overall situation. Event in military matters he uation. Except in military matters, he seemed to favor a let-nature-take-its-course approach, the exact opposite of the leave-nothing-to-chance school of social planning that had created the worse along with the better government programs in the first place. His response to the "do everything" theory of government appeared to be, "Do nothing." .

At least that was the message at the outset when we heard how a wide variety of federal interventions were going to be stopped once and for all. Better to dismantle the overkill machine, to call off the sortie altogether, than to conduct so wasteful and inefficient and troublemaking an operation. People could live their lives healthly and fairly and productively without all that burden and

This reaction seems to me no more helpful than the overprogrammed, hyperintrusive kind of legislating and managing it finds so abhorrent. And it has naturally raised all kinds of suspicions that it is not so much the stultifying evils of a big clumsy government machine that the administration is seeking to curb as the legitimate claims of people whose bardships cost others something to fix — the poor, the disenfranchised, the exploited and

tion, campaign-promise word, has lately shown at least a few signs of adjusting its perception of all this. In certain civil rights matters and environmental and urban questions, the Reagan people appear to be moving somewhat away from those old absolutist ideas about heaving out the government alto-gether and letting Charles Darwin handle the

This is good. It is also hard, maybe impossible. Can the U.S. government, acting as a kind of symbol of, and surrogate for, the society as a whole, concoct sensible, humane and relatively efficient answers to at least a respectable proportion of the problems we face? Will the Reagan government have the guts to move into that truly difficult area where you do neither everything nor nothing — but something that has risks proportionate to the prospective gain?

Hot Case Study

While everyone is waiting for the economplan's impact to be felt one way or, God help us, the other, there will be plenty of other case studies to observe in the adminis-tration's evolution toward a style and philosophy of governing. Civil rights legislation. most particularly renewal of the Voting Rights Act, is one case. The really hot case of the moment, however, is that of the good old

MX missile and basing system.
The full-fledged, 200-missile, 4,600-shelter, now-you-see-it-now-you-don't, moving-van MX system has always struck me as almost a parody of the overdone, oversize government contrivance that purports to be a solution and that everyone knows, somehow, just isn't going to happen and won't work if it does. If the Pentagon hadn't thought it up, Mel Brooks would have.

To his credit, Mr. Reagan and his aides seem to have begun trimming it down, not just for money reasons, but for program reasons as well. I think in fact that the way the president disposes of the broad array of military questions now before him will provide plenty of clues as to whether he can really do something about that huge and semi-senseless government reaction-machine he has complained of. For inspiration and guidance he should, whenever possible, contemplate

The Pressure On Japan For Defense

By Hobart Rowen

OISO, Japan — At this lovely seaside resort, the only reminder of the vaunted Japanese efficiency is a "robotized" swimming pool: Because ocean swimming in the area is dangerous, the Japanese have installed pumps making syn-thetic "ocean" waves that are al-thetic "ocean" waves that are armost as invigorating as the real thing. And there is no messy sand.

But the gentle ripples at pool-side disguise bigger ones inside the conference rooms at the Oiso Prince Hotel, site of the fifth Will-mode meeting (so named become mode meeting (so named because the first one was in that city). This conference, bringing together by Japanese and U.S. officials in a private forum, is ventilating the ektraordinary pressure being placed on the government of Premier Zenko Suzuki by President Reagan to increase Japan's defense commit-

The Japanese are doing their best to fend off U.S. pressure for a big increase right now in the Japanese military budget, which is only about $10 billion, or less than I about $10 billion, or less than I percent of their gross national product. The Japanese do not see as directly threatened by $1000 power as do the hawks in $1000 power as $1.5-to $1000 power as $1.

society, many of whom are at the Shimoda-Oiso conference, do not see Soviet expansionism as a threat to Japan. They are much more concerned with potential tentions in the Middle East that might shut off the flow of petroleum that provides 70 percent of Japanese needs. At a time when the United States is engaged in a tense strug-gle with Libya, Japan is buttering up that oil producer with excessive praise of it as "a truly democratic, society" on the occasion of the 12th anniversary of the Libyan revolution. Thus, Japan seeks an accommo-dation with the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, and seems to believe naively, that if the United States would only pressure Israel to give back the oc-cupied Arab territories and make peace with the Palestine Liberation Organization, oil would flow from the Gulf unimpeded.

This ignores all the other potential upsets in the tinderbox that is the Middle East, But there is aftertain shortsightedness on the U.S. side as well. For example, the free-sure for a substantial increase in Japanese military expenditures stems almost exclusively from U.S. budget pressures back home, without any real thought of what Japan would defend itself against, and of how the money would be speat, or where. And as some of the more thoughtful Americans at this con-ference have been saying out loud, the U.S. State Department seems to have given no thought to just how far the United States wants to go in pushing Japan into a ryle as a commanding military power

The Japanese did swing their military weight aggressi: through Asia and across the Paraic once, with humiliating and disastrous results. Since their defeat in World War II, they have rebuilt their power, but on the ecocomic side. There is little real thirst is Japan to do anything that would disturb the country's enormous economic success. The Japanese would rather lead any invasion with computers, integrated circuits, antomobiles and robots.-

missiles.
Yet the history of U.S.-Japanese relationships since the end of World War II suggests too easy a responsiveness to U.S. demands and pressures. And the hints one gets here suggest that this may he the case again. Already, the Suzuki government (to the dismay of gen-erally dovish public opinion) has quietly introduced fiscal 1982 expenditures for interceptor fighters, anti-submarine patrol planes and anti-submarine patrol planes and anti-submarine patrol planes and anti-submarine patrol planes and will show up in substantially big spending numbers in future years.

Air Force Controllers

When you listen to this talk that a new batch of U.S. air controllers can be trained in 21 months, you wonder what is to prevent, one day, the new batch from comport-ing themselves like the old.

I suggest that a solution to in-suring a safe and reliable air traffic control system in our country would he to turn over the responsibility to the U.S. Air Force. In this manner, we could count on the system in an emergency or in war, and it would provide a flexible career pattern for the interchange of personnel as between military and civil air assignments.

Should we give the responsibility to the U.S. Air Force, we will also be able to build up the air controller strength in the Air Force National Guard and the Air Force

Diet of Bias

There are many things that contribute to making a living in Eu-rope a pleasant experience for an American. Having to read your newspaper (in order to get the fi-nancial and sporting news from the United States) is not one of gress of Industrial Organizations in November of 1979. Mr. Meany was reared in the Samuel Gompers tradition of shunning permanent political alliances. When the Democratic Party delegate-selection reforms diminished labor's voice in the convention hall and the Demo-crats nominated candidates like

George McGovern and Jimmy

Carter, who had never earned the trust of union leaders, it was easy for Mr. Meany to order a virtual labor boycott of Democratic Party

London Crossbow Ban

During this present period of unease about the production of the neutron bomb, it might be well to recall that the second Lateran Council (1139) outlawed the crossbow for use against Christians, because of its deadly accuracy and power of penetration, its "quarrel" or short bolt being able to pene-trate the finest steel then in existiated the formal return of orga-nized labor to the head table of the Democratic Party. Labor received 15 at-large seats on the national committee and, in turn, union po-htical action committee funds have been flowing into the party treas-

Now there is a move to make union leaders - along with governors and members of Congress automatic delegates to the 1984 convention. That would help restore to labor the veto power over Democratic presidential nominees that it enjoyed through 1968.

But labor has paid a price for its increased partisanship, in the form of a growing alienation from the people in power. Mr. Kirkland has complained that he has less access to the White House than his predecessor enjoyed, not just with Mr. Carter and other Democrade presidents, but with Republicans Dwight D. Eisenhower, Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford. The recent choice of Malcoim R.

Lovell Jr. as undersecretary of labor was supposed to be a gesture to the union leaders, who griped that neither Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan nor any member of the senior White House staff consulted with them. Mr. Lovell is well-respected by unionists from his days in the auto industry, but the typical attitude was ex-pressed by a UAW official who asked, "Who the hell believes an undersecretary swings any

More vexing to the labor leaders is their loss of clout in Congress. The AFL-CIO boldly announced that it was forming a coalition to fight Mr. Reagan's budget cuts and to press for a wage-tilted, not

Mr. Reagan what he wanted, said there was little evidence in their mail that grass-roots workers were backing their union leaders' stands.

Mass Protest

Stung by the charge that labor is a political paper tiger, Mr. Kirk-land has ordered a mass protest march in Washington on Sept. 19 against the Reagan economic poli-cies. Ultimately, however, the real test of labor's ability to mobilize against Mr. Reagan will come, not in the size of the one-day protest, but in the pocketbook judgments of working families.

Mr. Reagan made big inroads in blue-collar precincts last Novem-ber, in large part because those workers had suffered economically from Mr. Carter's policies. Mea-sured in constant, uninflated dollars, the real weekly earnings after taxes of the typical factory worker with three dependents declined 9.7 percent from January, 1977, to January, 1981 — from $164.33 to $148.38 (in 1977 dollars).

In the first six months of the Reagan administration, they declined a further 1.1 percent, to $146.74. That means that wages have not kept pace with inflation so far in the Reagan era either, if the same decline continues, workers will end up losing about as badly in Mr. Reagan's term as they did in Mr. Carter's — and it would be no trick for Mr. Kirkland to rally them against the Republicans. But scheduled tax cuts will inrease take-home pay. And if Mr. Reagan can keep the rate of inflation moving downward, he may be able to fatten the real wage packet. That would lead to happier Labor Days, not just for labor but for the Republican Party as well.

For Some Light Reading, Try an Apocalypse

by Joseph Fitchett

ARIS — As France's new Socialist ministers spent the summer exhorting their compatriots to regain confidence in the future, they were upstaged by the dire pronouncements of a 16th-century seer. From concierge to statesman, the French people are enthralled by Nostradamus and a new interpretation of his medieval prophecies that predicts catastrophe for France.

First, and imminently, comes the occupation of Europe by Soviet forces, moving from Afghanistan, allied with Arab armies mobilized by Col. Moamer Qadhafi of Libya. Worse follows: Nuclear annihilation of Paris, war with China, finally the destruction of European civdization, probably in 1999.

morThis detailed apocalypse appears in a new book, "Nostradamus: Historian and Prophet" by Jean Charles de Fontbrune, whose doomsday message seems to have touched a chord of French national anxiety. It is a runaway bestseller, and Nostradamus haunts conversation at Club Mediterrance beaches and fashionable Parisian dinner tables.

The prophecies are selling 5,000 copies daily and reaching millions more Frenchmen through extensive media coverage, which is often deferential in tone. The publisher expects sell a half-million hardback copies at the nivalent of $25, expensive in France.

the Trying to explain the book's appeal, most canalysts relate it to deep-seated, inchoste worages among the French about the nuclear arms rice, economic slump and social and moral changes — a kind of subconscious dread that politicians and churchmen can no longer relieve but that the book can exorcise.

 Other commentators, noting the approach of the year 2000, compare it to the panic in . Western civilization at the approach of the ... in the invented reprisoactively by historians in the troubled 16th mentury, the era when Nostradamus himself Fontbrune shuns such speculation. A 45eyear-old pharmacentical executive, he got up tas 4 a.m. daily for three years to write the book. It took 17 years of his work (and 25 damus' writings.

In the original edition, most of the text is so obscurely worded that it appears to be gibber-ish. Fontbrune's discovery is that Michel de Notredame - a Provencal physician who was noted in his day for checking Black Plague eptdemics by applying rudimentary sanitation and who then produced several books of what be said were divinely inspired prophecies — deliberately enciphered his writings to clude the Inquisition.

Jean Charles de Fontbrune with an edition of Nostradamus' prophecies.

The key, Fonthrunc says, is that Nostradamus wrote in French using Latin grammar and verse conventions. To get the meaning, each stanza therefore had to be translated into Latin, then retranslated into modern French. He also fed every word into a computer, then collated all similar references and researched them in t6th-century geography books and

This classical exegesis — coupled with a flair for plausible disaster scenarios — enabled Fontbrune to match Nostradamus' prophecies to hundreds of events. Some — the French Revolution, the fall of the shah of Iran — are historical. Many are predictions: World War III, inflation, earthronmental pollution, earthroughes on the Bisters (also predicted by quakes on the Riviera (also predicted hy seismologists), the assassination of Pope John Paul II in Lyons.

This outlook does not unduly alarm Fonthrune. Asked how he plans to ride out the predicted upheaval, Fontbrune, reached on vaca-tion in the south of France, said: "I wouldn't want to move myself — unless perhaps an American university might be interested in giving me a home so I can pursue my work, you know, with a higger computer."

Although be knew the United States only by future vision, Nostradamus took a dim view of it - according to Fontbrune, because he saw it as a Protestant country bent on undermining Catholic Europe. Nostradamus prophesies that the United States, helped by South Africa and Israel, will win World War III in 1985 (or

For Fonthrune, the United States is the new world that lies beyond the prophecies. "Our decline and end in Europe will give way to a new golden age, the Age of Aquarius, which will flower in the United States in alliance with Asians," he said.

Meanwhile, Fontbrune has time to hask in his own unforeseen fame and fortune. His book is a classic publishing sleeper: He had been paying to print his work until a Paris publisher, Christian Bourgois, better known for high-brow literary collections, was induced to publish a small edition under a subsidiary imprint, Editions du Rocher.

It was a modest gamble since Nostradamus' Delphic writings have sustained mystic cults for five centuries and periodically fascinated the French public at large. But nothing foreshadowed the current national obsession. Mainly ignored when it appeared last De-cember, the book contained several forecasts that have come to pass. One was a prediction, in defiance of conventional political wisdom.

of Francois Mitterrand's election: "the blooming in France of the Rose" — symbol of the Socialist party. When Mitterrand won in May, Nostradamus' sales bohbed upward. Then the mass-circulation magazine Paris-Match — legendary for sensing trends — did a July cover story asserting that Nostradamus had finally heen decoded.

As demand exploded, the publisher spent the rest of the summer scrambling to keep the book in print. On a single day, 60,000 orders came in. Five printing companies had to be dragooned into churning out copies in August, normally a sacrosanct vacation month.

Buyers are a cross-section of French society book-sellers say. Young people normally addicted to thrillers are fascinated and so are the fans of mediums. President Mitterrand owns a copy. The head of one of France's biggest cor-porations consulted Fontbrune about where to relocate his factories (reported recommendation: South Africa).

On the heels of Fontbrune's success followed the ultimate Parisian literary accolade

"Apocalypto-masochism," sneered the rightist Le Figaro.

Leftist journals ridiculed the Nostradamus craze as a defeatist fantasy offering rightist Frenchmen the vision of a Gotterdämmerung end to Socialism. Others denounced it as a plot to undermine the Socialist government. (Opinion polls, bowever, show no dent in Mitterrand's popularity.) Fontbrune is no stranger to controversy: His father, also a Nostradamus disciple, had his work hanned by Vichy for predicting Hit-ler's defeat. Hitler's own soothsayer cited Nostradamus to promise a 1,000-year Reich.

Fonthrune himself contends that his work is "for the little people, not the politicians, who never heed such warnings."

He knows his market. Unmistakably, French fascination with the occult is rising.

Woodcut of Nostradamus in 1550.

Polls show a spreading belief in astrology, many young people dahble in the paranormal, and the market — discovered a decade ago by the best-selling "The Morning of the Magicians" — continues to expand. As Le Point magazine commented: "As more people get educated, sophisticated supersultion spreads."

Others take the matter less seriously, comparing the book to the vogue for disaster mov-

Cynics note that August - vacation time for Frenchmen and dog-days for their media — often spawns an intellectual fad. It was the and-Marxist New Philosophers three years ago. # The Doughboys Return to Deauville

by Joan Dupont

EAUVILLE, France — As the seventh American Film Festival opens this weekend in Deauville on the Normandy coast there is the usual ripple of annoyance throughout the French film industry. The invasion of American movies is a fact of Life; there is no need to rub it in. Hollywood competes with and often beats local products at the box office; while French films in the United States lead quiet lives.

The Deauville festival is equally unloved by the intellectual magazine 'Cahiers du Cinema, whose critics call it a right-wing event that promotes like star system and caters to the "mink coat elite." The festival'a mere existence seems, if not an insult, a redundancy - kowtowing to U.S. cultural imperialism.

Whiffs of such imperialism are strong here. Shelley Roitman, an independent producer, recalls the days when Darryl F. Zanuck occupied Normandy in the early 1960s, turning out "The Longest Day," which became a French film favorite. "Everybody in the business was associated with Darryl Zanuck's D-Day," says Roitman. "He had full coopera-tion from the French army, the gendarmerie, as well as the Pentagon and the 6th Fleet,

"" "He began to act like a general, talking about his troops landing. He would charge into a little Norman cafe and bark, I want the White House on the phone! — and he would get the White House on the phone; no wonder he thought he was Eisenhower!"

For an event that stirs such memories and discomfort, Deauville was conceived modestly enough, as a straightforward commercial enterprise.

Not a full-fledged festival — since it gives no awards — nor a market — since its top films are scheduled for distribution through the major companies — Deauville is a logical promotion spot for U.S. films since it is held a few months after the Cannes festival and just before the films. release in France. It is also an opportunity to promote the city of Deauville, attracting crowds to its boardwalks and gaming tables, bringing business to the coast of Normandy during its fallow season, after the -races and the August holidays.

Lionel Chouchan, whose publicity agency, "Promo 2000," specializes 'in "prestige operations," created the festival at the suggestion of film critic André Halimi. The idea was to reproduce the success of the Fantasy Film Festival that Chouchan launched nine years ago in Avoriaz, the ski resort.

"It's hard to compare the two festivals," says Chouchan. "Avoriaz gives awards and was the first festival to show films by Steven Spielberg and Brian De Palma; it is known throughout Europe. Deauville focuses exclusively on U.S. cinema.

In hatching the Deauville festival, which runs this year until Sept. 13, Chouchan and Halimi teamed up with the municipality and with Lucien Barrière, who owns three of Deauville's top hotels and the casino. If Barrière provides the accommodations, it is Mayor Anne d'Ornano who guarantees the tone of the galas by presiding over the festivities and dinner parties. These sedate affairs seem attuned to traditional guests from across the Channel rather than to the explosive movie crowd.

According to one distributor, the fact that the festival organization has According to one instributor, the fact that the restron organization has so little to do with the movie industry is a problem. "Frankly, I panic "whenever I send a film to Deauville," he confides, "It's not run by cinema people and it shows; the choice of guests is arbitrary." Some industry insiders feel that "Promo 2000" is more involved with serving clients than with the conditions needed to launch a film. As for the programming, critics have accused the festival of reflecting the most conservative trends, and every year, a valiant effort is made to overcome this impression. Martine Jouando, who is in charge of programming, seeks out the more imaginative, offbeat endeavours, no easy task for a selection committee caught between Cannes leftovers and the pressure of the season's new crop.

Those who are staunchly behind the festival, as well they might be, are representatives of the major companies, known as "the kings of Deau-ville." Didier Moncel of Warner Brothers, Paris, chartered a jet for Clint Eastwood to come over and promote "Bronco Billy" last year. This year, he is bringing over Sean Connery for "Outland," the film that opens the festival. "It's a very pleasant way of promoting," he says. "Deanville is more compact than Cannes and far less expensive. We are not taking risks, since there is no competition, which can kill a film. We get the foreign press and organize junkets, using our own TV crew to film inter-

Since the films they screen are scheduled for release during the fall, the timing is strategically on target for major distributors who have copies and subtitles in hand. The "majors" make the festival, and the others come along on their coattails. For smaller companies, costs are extra and the market may not warrant a trip to France. "Yet it is not true to say that there are no films by independents," says Philippe Selz of Cinema International Corporation, the distribution company for Paramount, Universal and MGM. This year, CIC has three films at Deauville, with "Raiders of the Lost Ark" closing the festival. Gene Hackman is coming over for "All Night Long" and Alan Alda for his film "The Four Sea-

"Stars and directors get a kick out of the old-fashioned English atmosphere of Deanville, and I get more work done here in 24 hours than during a week in Paris," says Selz.

Nostalgic retrospectives and personal appearances by directors and stars are the festival's big attraction. This year's tributes are to Joseph Mankiewicz, Arthur Penn and Lana Turner, and all three are expected to present their films.

Chouchan has little patience for those who claim that there should be no American film festival on French soil without a similar celebration and promotional gesture - for French cinema in the United States. "These people tend to forget that French deals too, are clinched at Dearwille. They are charvinists, not showmen," he says.

Wishful thinking aside, nothing short of protectionist measures can stop the infiltration of American movies in France. Whether from Cannes or from Deauville, they come across the beachheads, inexorable as the armies of Darryl F. Zanuck.

Around and About Ireland at 3 mph

by Eric W. Johnson

UBLIN - Had anyone told me I would experience a reflex of pleasure as I lay my head down on a short, narrow bunk and got a faint whiff of horse dung from the pillow, I would have said he or she was crazy. But that was before my wife, Gay, and I spent a week on intimate terms with an Irish horse.

At Clonakilty, West Cork, in the very south of Ireland, we spent seven days on a horse caravan (the Irish word for covered wagon) and traveled all of 521/2 miles, round trip. We his resentful way of starting up again was to hack up a few steps.

However, we learned to deal with all this. and Billy was an expert in certain respects: He never tripped, he never shied and he knew just how much leeway to allow as the caravan passed objects at the edge of the road.

Our caravan - rather like a small houseboat on wheels - was about 12 feet long, not counting the shafts, and could in theory sleep three, though we were glad to be only two who know and love each other well. "It's like camping," said Gay, "and there's a fine line between camping and poverty, except that camping is voluntary and comes to an end."

The grass looks greener to the slow trot of an Irish caravan horse.

passed through Pike's Bar, Owenahincha, Ross Carbery, Leap, Skibbereen, Drimoleague and Ballina Carriga, We averaged 10 miles an hour. But 10 miles of Irish countryside seen at 3 miles an hour - with midday stops at a puh between glimpses of multiflowered hedgerows, ruined castles, ancient houses, sea inlets and stretches of rolling fields punctuated with green crops as well as grazing cattle and horses - are 10 rich miles indeed.

Each day we began (aided by a bucket of oats) by catching our horse Billy in the pas-ture, putting on his bridle, currying him, leading him down the road to the caravan and harnessing him according to instructions. We would back Billy between the metal shafts, being sure the thick leather loops went untwisted onto the ends; attach the trace chains to the collar hooks (so that Billy could pull) and the breeching straps to the shafts (so that the caravan would not hump Billy's legs going down hills) and finally start off at a walk to minimize the risk of hitting the gate on the way out

When we had reserved our caravan we were told: "If you don't expect luxury and if you dress warm and dry, I'm sure you'll enjoy yourself, once you become accustomed to the vagaries of the horse." Billy did have his vagaries, but so do horses the world over.

At the beadquarters of West Cork Caravans. an amiable man named Jer (for Jeremiah) gave careful instructions, including vocabulary: "Go-way!" (Giddy-up!), "Wee!" (Whoa!) and "Back-up!"

After absorbing a list of 23 Don't's followed by 12 Do's that concluded with "Don't lose your horse. We want him back," we were accompanied by a driver to a point a mile west of Clonakilty and turned loose, amazed at West Cork's faith in us.

What were the vagaries of Billy and other caravan horses? Well, when Billy heard the clopping of a friend ahead, he wanted to pass his friend. But if a friend wanted to pass him. he sped up. If we tried to stop him, he zig-zagged and sometimes went into reverse, which often moved one end of our caravan toward the middle of the road, endangering the neck and chest of anyone walking beside. Billy responded to whinnies; near journey's end he became hell-bent for pasture. If we stopped briefly by the roadside, he grazed, and religion and beauty.

After a few days in the caravan, we got used to the system, gained respect for Billy and loved the slow progress through a land so rich in history, rumor, myth, passion, poetry, ruins,

Our caravan was furnished with linens, blankets, cooking utensils, cups, plates and cutlery. It had a bottled-gas two-burner stove, a large container for water and two gas lamps. It was modeled on old gypsy caravans, except that the originals did not have rubber tires, were beautifully decorated and burned turf (peat) for heat. Horse caravans today are mainly for tourists; Irish gypsies, we were told, now use motor-drawn trailers.

Our route was prescribed, as were our overnight caravan sites. We had no objection to this, since it assured roads hroad enough for us to be passed by other traffic, and adequate grazing and water for Billy. Caravan-site facilitles are erratic. Good water and toilets there always are, showers sometimes, heated ones now and then. Along the day's route, or in a nearby town, we could easily buy the necessaries for cooking a good dinner and breakfast in the caravan: canned beef stew, homemade oatcake or whole wheat bread, wine, cheeses, lettuce, potatoes and carrots. Gay cooked; I cleaned up. If you are lazy and willing to spend $9 to $22, you can usually get fair-to-good substantial meals at a restaurant. We preferred eating in our caravan and observing the horse caravan social life.

Caravaners are mostly young couples — with well-behaved, vigorous children — or young singles. Many are Dutch or German: We met no British or Irish, nor any Americans. Often a large, noisy, multilingual group of children and adults played lively, humorous ball-games between, under, over and around the caravans and their metal shafts, with never an injury or a wail.

However, a caravan site is not the place to get to know the Irish. The places to do this are in the puhs and stores, asking directions or strolling through the towns after each day's journey. And it helped that we were, by definition and determination, in no hurry. Of course, the history of Ireland is too emotional and complex to recite here. Suffice it to say that all of it shows in the faces of the people, even the

In County Cork, we found that people seldom answer a question with ves or no. We were told that in Gaelic (Irish, the language is called in Ireland), there are no words for yes and no.

Instead, with a very pleasant firmness, both in Irish and in Irish English, questions are answered thus: "Is that a peat bog down there?" "It is." "Do people mind these slow caravans driving along the roads?" "Oh, they do not." "Will it be a fine day tomorrow?" "It will."

We really grew to love the Country Cork folk, described in a guide to the town of Skib-bereen put out hy the Junior Chamber of Commerce as "local people with their friendly open personalities and anxicty to please." It is this anxiety to please on the part of all that saved us from time to time when scheduled arrangements hroke down.

How do they hreak down? Reservations are not always actually made. Towels promised the next day are not delivered. Bus schedules (we found before and after the caravan week) suddenly diminish on holidays and Sundays. Bus and train timetables are easily confused and despite the assurance "you can't miss it," directions, though charmingly expressed with enthusiasm and good will, do not always jibe with realities.

"Ireland needs straightening out," a woman in a Skihbereen bar told us. However, we would not like to see it straightened out, for whenever we told our problems to anyone, everyone rallied round. Neighbor told neighbor and shopkeeper, and we were rescued and delighted and entertained as well. They offer to pack you a lunch; they let you use their clothesline; they recommended a tailor (who is good and cheap); they offer you a drink and, so help me, if you forgot your money, they give you what you need.

There are eight autfits that operate 35 ta 60 horse caravans each in Ireland, most of them in the south and west. Send for the leaflet "Horse Drawn Caravans," from the Irish Tourist Board (Bord Failte), PO Box 273, Dublin 8. Ask also for its booklets "Guide to Approved Accommodations in Ireland" (it lists formhouses, country homes, bed-and-breakfast places as well as ho iels and guesthauses) and "From Ireland with Love," an excellent general guide ta Ireland. Bus and train transportation is very good and reasonable in price. Almost everywhere you can find bed-and-breakfast places run by strong, enterprising, cordial women aided by their husbands and children. The typical cost is $10 a person a night with full Irish breakfast.

A week on a caravan costs from $190 ta $350 for a 4-berth vehicle plus $5 a night at the caravan sites. All equipment is provided, except towels and tailet paper (na tailet aboard). Bring waterproof clothing, including light rubber boots.

OME — The second annual Pan-Asian Festival of Music, Theater and Dance ended last month in Rome, but it's really still going on: many of the performers who assembled here for 10 days intensive experience of the music and dance of India and Japan are appearing elsewhere in Europe during the oext few weeks. The artists from South India, for example, have another reodezvous in Paris at this year's Festival d'Automne in October, for an u oprec-edented month of South Indian music, dance

The Roman festival is organized each summer by Alessio Alba, who directs a local musical associatioo called ARK. An accomplished contemporary musician. Alba also has a talent for gathering Oriectal performing artists, many of whom bave never before appeared outside their own countries. His secret is direct contact, rather than dealing with agencies.

This year the festival took place in the square at the top of the Capitoline Hill in Rome, presided over by the statue of Minerva, goddess of wisdom. Michelangelo's sweeping piazza, where the equestrian image of Marcus Aurelius is made to turn his back on pagan Rome and face toward St. Peter's, was a stunningly appropriate setting for Oriental music and dance, which are expressly intended to reveal a sacred view of the world.

Alba's festivals are predominantly Indian in cootent - Indian civilization is "central" in Asia, very much like Roman culture in the West — with other Asian countries variously represented. This year the Reibo Consort of Tokyo gave impeccable performances of tradi-tional Japanese music. In the famous "Shika no Tone," the eerie, plaintive notes of two bamboo flutes and the rough breathing of the players evoked a pair of deer crying to each other among deserted mountains. Each sound is essential, and the silences are as important as the sounds, like the incisive strokes and empty spaces of a fine Zen landscape,

The Japanese music was refreshingly as-tringent after the complex profundities and dazzling inventions of North Indian classical art. Monumental, meditative and metaphysical, the dhrupad style, which reached its height around 1600 under the Mogul emperor Akhbar, is the real classical genre of North India. Dhrupads are rarely beard now because of their gravity and difficulty, but bere they were sung by the 75-year-old Ram Chatur Mallik, on his first visit outside India.

Another fine singer, Bhim Sen Joshi, represented the khoyal style; a flexible, luxuriant expansion on a core of deep, devotional sentiment. Khayol singing encourages astonishing vocal modulations and improvisations, linked to the regular rbythmic sequences of the tabla, the two small kettledrums always used in this kind of music. The rhythmic accompaniment is often itself of intricate subtlety, recalling what Debussy said of oriental drumming at the beginning of the century: "Our percussion instruments by comparison produce nothing better than the barbaric coise of a traveling

Zakir Hussain, the tabla player at the Rome coocerts, was probably the best known to Western audiences of all the artists present. He has often given concerts in Europe and the United States, including both coolemporary and popular music, and his father, Allah Rakh, is Ravi Shankar's tabla player and also worked

The transformation of such traditional instruments as the sitar and the flute into virtuoso performers is the latest development in Indian classical music. Zakir performed solo a long composition in which he forced his tabla into the role of both rhythmic and melodic instruments, letting himself go in an exhibition of percussive pyrotechnics that set the audience in an uproar.

But he is really beard to best advantage as the rbythmic accompanist to the voice or another melodic instrument. Here his precision, discretion and authority constitute a minor musical miracle, considering that be is barely 30 years old and has been at his prime for a long time. ("If you're like this now," I asked him, "what are you going to be at 40?" "Tired," be replied.)

Zakir also accompanied Hariprasad Chaura-sia on the flute and Shivkumar Sharma on the santur, a cymbalum or dulcimer that sounds like a thousand remote celestial barps playing at the same time. Closely associated with Sufi mysticism in Persia, the santur has become an Indian virtuoso instrument in the hands of

Sharma, a tall, almost floating figure with an ineffable but firm Kashmiri face — oeither In-dian nor Persian, Hindu nor Muslim, but, like his fascinating instrument, all of them togeth-

Chaurasia is an equally fine musician of an altogether different type. Large, elegant and friendly, he inhabits the cultural melting pot of Bombay, Defily, he inserted some foreign notes and syncopated sequences into the introduction of the long raga that was the pièce de résistance of the final concert. These were instantly taken up by Zakir, and together they developed the raga as a piece of exotic jazz.

This pastiche was coocealed by their bril liant execution, but left many people discon-certed and even sbocked. One couple got up in the middle and left. "We came for Indian music." they said, "not a swing session."

After the concert the articulate Zakir was asked to explain. He said that Indian musicians were employing such means ingenuously. as a way to easy popularity in the West. What ever the reason may be, the resulting kitsch was doubly deplorable given that Chaurasia might easily be called the greatest flutist in the world - laking into account the difficulty of the Eastern flute without fixed notes, the continuous musical invention required in performance, the variety and splendor of his effects (he can imitate practically any wind instrument, from the shrillest piccolo to the bleariest saxophone). And Sharma ranks no less as a santur player, nor Zakir as a drummer.

Watch for these great musicians as they move about Europe in the next two months, but don't let them give you Bombay jazz.

MERSHAM, England - One of the most interesting recent publishing ventures in England is a small, comprehensive guide to dining in France titled "French Leave." It is singular among guides in English devoted to the pleasures of the Freoch table and offers as a casual boous the finest, most concise glossary of food terms to be found on French meous - whether at home or abroad — that I have encountered.

The pocket-size 160-page book is the work of a 44-year-old former computer consultant, Richard Binns, who, after dining with his wife, Anne, throughout France over a number of years, receotly sal down and ool only wrole the book but also served as its editor, proofreader, map designer, illustrator (the illustrations are minor but charming), publish-er, financier, salesman and press agent. "French Leave" was on the best-seller list of

The Times of London for 14 weeks and for a week occupied the No. 1 position.

"French Leave" deliberately ignores the major metropolitan areas of France — Paris, Lyons, Marseilles and the like — and confines itself to creat distinct in the like. itself to great dining in wholly accessible but out-of-the-way places. You will not find Lasserre or Taillevent in Paris listed, but you will find all the best-known rural and suburban restaurants such as those of Paul Bocuse and the Troisgros brothers, the Oasis in La Napoule and Le Moulin de Mougins.

This guide is not a competitor of the Guide Michelin. It could be called a pocketbook companion, although the two are in no sense related where ownership is concerned. "French Leave" makes note of the number of stars or rosettes accorded in the other guide to the various restaurants listed, but there are numerous restaurants listed in "French Leave" that are not in Michelin.

"French Leave" explains in some detail many of the facets of dining in French restau-rants that are not explained in Michelin. For example, Michelin, which I find indispensable in any gastronomic tour of France, mentions a wine called Manicle in connection with the well-known Alain Chapel restaurant in Mion-oay, near Lyons, In "French Leave" you find that Manicle is a not so well-known but good, inexpensive white Bressan wine. Similarly, all the specialties recommended in Michelin are included in "French Leave."

"French Leave" has a good deal of chatty charm, revealing far more than most guides about the comfortable histories of certain restaurants, including those of the Blanc family around Lyons. The family, as the author notes, are legends in the Bresse country; Paul Blanc opened one of my personal favorites, the Chapon Fin in Thoissey, You learn that Georges Blanc, a grandson, now runs the original restaurant at Vonnas

There is also a brief history of the various "mères" restaurants in the Lyonnais region. These mothers-as-cooks-and-restaurant-owners, the author says, "have had an important influence on Lyonnais cooking since La Mère

Guy started it all two centuries ago."
"The most famous of the many mothers

were La Mère Filliou, who served just five or six dishes but developed them to perfection, and La Mère Brazier who, after the war, ran one of the few three-star restaurants in France. the Col de la Luère, west of Lyons." So much for those who ask if women have ever been important in French cuisine. All these facts have been recorded several times over the years, but I have never seen them in such a comprehensive restaurant guide.

I recently visited with Richard and Anne Binns at their country bome, a two-story, ivy-colored brick house in this town about 25 miles northwest of London.

I asked if Binns would name his five preferred restaurants in France. He began with Girardet, and I reminded him that his sentiment was talking — that Girardet is in Switzerland, though not far from France. He then mentioned Michel Guerard's Les Près et Les Sources d'Eugènie at Eugènie-les-Bains; the Bourgeois Restaurant (which Binns says is actually a bistro) near Lyons; La Paix at Chauffailles; Le Moulin du Roc at Champagnac-deBelair, in the Dordogne, and the Pyrenees in SI.-Jean-Pied-de-Port. Le Moulin du Roc, he hastened to point out, is one of those rarities, a Freoch restaurant that is owned by a "lady cbef," Solange Gardillou.

l asked if he believed, as many people are contending that nouvelle cuisine is on its way out. He termed such thinking nonsense. "I've traveled a thousand miles through the Py-rences," he said, "all around Lyons and the Jura, and even the oldest diehard chefs have taken to it. No one could go back to the heavy traditional cooking of France. In the nouvelle cuisine there are lightness, delicacy, a natural reduction of flavors. Things aren't smothered in beavy sauces. Every chef can be his own creator and not a slave to others. Who will want to give up that freedom and creativity? Who wants to be bloated?"

An expanded version of "French Leave," to appear in mid-October, may be ordered by mail for the equivalent of $6.95, postage paid. Write Binns at Chiltern House, Amersham Road, Amersham, Bucks, HP 6 5PE, England.

'Crime Wave' Upsets Spain

by Harry Debelius

ADRID - Like so many others who went to the Pamplona bull-running fiestas popularized by Ernest Hemingway, a young Australian could not find a room, so he slept in his rented car. He awoke to discover that his small bag, with not only his money but also his passport, airline ticket and credit cards, had been stolen from beside him in the car.

An elderly English woman spent two months in a hospital after a purse-snatcher on a motorcycle grabbed her bag as she was strolling in Seville. Since the bag was slung from her shoulder, the thief's tenacity and the speed of the motorcycle dragged ber to the ground. She was not only robbed but badly hurt.

are even more upset, bowever, by the circular distributed by the British Association of Travel Agents this summer, which one tour operator in Marbella dubbed "The Costa del Crime Report." Citing British consular sources, it warns of the dangers of criminal attacks faced by tourists, particularly in "dangerous parts" of Malaga and Seville. "Robberies with violence, affecting foreign residents and visitors, appear to be on the increase in certain areas," the circular says. "The British Consulate in Malaga has received reports of incidents involving robberies and other forms of violence against British citizens this year...li would be desirable for visitors to be warned to avoid being alone on the streets, above all in areas which the tour operators and their local representatives know to be dangerous places. "Equal care is advisable in Seville," the document adds. "In other cities, the snatching of purses from motorcycles is quite frequent," and it suggests "advising clients, insisting that they should leave all important documents — passports, travelers' checks — and most of their money in the hotel safe-deposit box. Change purses, billfolds and bags should be hidden if possible."

The circular also warns, "Tourists entering Spain from the north should realize that they ought to be especially careful in passing through the Basque country, where the government is combating terrorism."

The warning, which Spanish tourist authorities consider to be unjustifiably alarmist, provoked a letter of protest from the Spanish boteliers' association and a request from the Spanish Foreign Ministry to the British Embassy in Madrid to produce a copy of the controversial circular, although diplomats of both countries realized it was not an official

What rankled Spanish officials most was the implication that the south is crime-ridden, even unsafe, whereas statistics from the Interior

Ministry do not seem to bear out that charge. No one is more aware of the damaging effect that uncontrolled crime can have on Spain's biggest industry, tourism, than the tourist officials. Yet they consider the circu-

In fact, to the extent that the statistics are accurate. Spain's crime rate is dropping, and it is dropping faster in the south, specifically, than in the rest of Spain.

At the same time, the pattern of crime is changing in Spain. There were fewer cars stolen in 1980, but the number of rapes reported almost doubled over the previous year. There is some reason for doubt, nevertheless, about bow much of a real increase is represented by an average of 16 rape cases per week last year compared to 9 in 1979.

Also, the changing sociological climate could make it easier for families to denounce cases of sexual assault than in the past, when shame inhibited the reporting of crimes of this type Holdups more than doubled last year, with an average of more than 2,000 per mooth, and bomicides increased by 51 percent. But the percentage increase in homicides is deceiving: The total in Spain last year was 494, a figure regarded as low for an entire country.

Still. Spaniards and foreign residents are deeply concerned about the law-and-order issue. It offers little comfort to a man whose bome has been burgled to point out that the crime rate in Spain is low compared with that of other Western European countries, or to offer explanations for an increase in crime. Vacationers in Spain — which is visited every year by nearly as many foreigners as there are Spaniards — do not even have the satisfaction of complaining in the local press, and are even less interested in explanations than the natives. The language barrier, combined with tourists' frequent lack of knowledge of local customs, makes them prime targets for the crooks who spend their summers and falls on the coasts and at

Spain's secretary of state for tourism. Eloy Ybanez, feels there are three factors involved in satisfying tourisis: "Absolute security from crime, absolute security in public health matters and another factor that we'll call 'the complementary offer,' " - increased recreational and special-interests facilities such as gambling casinos and sports installations.

"A desire for crime-free vacations is logical, although I think the level of peace and security in Spain is comparable and quite similar to that of any other European country." he cootinues.

"And the characteristics are more or less the same, including the characteristic of a higher crime rate in the big cities and an increase in crime wherever and whenever there is a large concentration of people. "But when a person is on vacation he wants to have even more peace and quiel than at home. We all react the same way."

ANGKOK — Nick Jero was once obliged, at age 16, to challenge an old-er boy to a duel after the boy had in-sulted Zsa Zsa Gabor. The date of this historic event is a secret, but Zsa Zsa was 12 at the time and seated on Nick's lap in a Buda-

"She was very beantiful even then," Nick remembers. "This chap yanked her off my lap and of course I had to chai fortunately, were outlawed in Hungary after World War I, and so we decided on fisticuffs. He knocked me cold. I hope Zsa Zsa remembers my gailantry and not my puny left hook." Today, Nick Jero relies on charm and his fluency in six languages to solve most probems at his restaurant here, Nick's Number 1 which be opened in a 100-year-old Thai buildng in 1952.

Local and foreign diners come seeking not only European food with a Hungarian accent but also a chance to converse with the bost. lero is a man of many anecdotes, some of which have the ring of inspired invention. His guesis are a cross-section of celebrities past and present and lesser-known people who know a good meal when they eat one

A pride of European royalty, exiled and otherwise, has dined at Nick's. So have David Niven, Edward G. Robinson and William Holden. James Michener usually stops when be's in town. Nancy Kwan, best remembered for ber movie role as "Susie Wong," appeared one night with a phalanx of attentive escorts. "She was a peach," Nick said.

In the late 1960s, during the height of the Vietnam war, thousands of U.S. soldiers, diplomats and congressmen passed through Bangkok. Many of them were directed to Nick's and "lined up four deep waiting for tables," one veteran of that era recalls. Bob Hope, en Nick Jero in his Bangkok restaurant. 2258.

route to entertain troops, was among them. These days the restaurant sees fewer celebrities but enjoys a steady local and foreign chentele. The menu reflects the influence of Nick's late mother, Margarita, an egalitarian countess who spent as much time in the kitchen as in the salon. Her well-tried recipes, redolent of paprika and other spices, still predominate. Long-time local patrons and informed visitors often ask for "Lobster Jubilee," a lobster baked with mushrooms, green peppers, sherry and Pernod sauce and garnisbed with baked oysters and prawns an gratin. Plakapong, a deep-sea bass, is offered meunière and bonne

Kobe beef is also popular, especially "Kobe steak à la Nick" with creamed spinach, mushrooms, baked potatoes and a locally renowned house salad. The steak is charcoal broiled, sautéed in burgundy and served flambé with cognac. Other meat favorites include Norwegian venison, schnitzels, goulashes (naturally) and spare ribs - with good doses of paprika. "a noble condiment" according to Jero.

The classic old-style Thai bouse with its teak beams and walls has been converted into what Jero calls a "rustic Hungarian inn." The main dining area, seating 60, is furnished with bare wooden tables and Hungarian-style wooden chairs. Kerosene lamps illuminate the tables and keening Hungarian melodics are beard in the background. One wall is covered with the visiting cards of innumerable habitués.

Dinner for two with cocktails and wine from a spare but respectable cellar ranges from about 600 baht (the equivalent of $26) for a la carte selections to 800-900 bahl for bouse specialties. Nick's Number 1 is expensive for Bangkok but slightly less so than other top European restaurants here.

Jero claims his place is baunted by a female ghost pining for a lost love. Like Zsa Zsa Gabor, she has yet to appear but when she does, local legend has it, she'll perch on Nick's lap, ouzzling his ooce-noble ear, whispering of the self felt in the last important auctions of the 1980-81 season, particularly in July, is still perceptible. In Paris galleries dealing in 19th- and 20th-century paintings, business has been slack for the last three or four months. A leading dealer in Impressionists and other related schools of the 19th and early-20th century says that sales have slowed down but so have dealers' acquisitions. Private owners just aren't selling these days.

While it is possible that this reflects the anxtrend seems in fact to be widespread in Europe. August has been quieter than usual at the Louvre des Antiquaires — the Paris antique dealers' center, just off the Louvre Museum — which normally has a wide foreign attendance when the rest of the city virtually shuts down and there is nowhere else to browse for an-

Another telling sign of the current low-keyed trend is the outcome of the Monte Carlo

Antique Dealers' Show, which closed its doors

last August. Although Parisian dealers made a special effort to display some outstanding pieces, they admitted that they were not seri-ously expecting to sell any. Indeed, they did not. Business was confined to middle-range

Characteristically, a matching commode and secretary — writing cabinet with drop-leaf front — of the Louis XVI period sold shortly after the opening for 280,000 francs. True, they are attractive pieces: Their yellow satin-wood veneer is considerably rarer than the usual mahogany. Second, they had the addi-tional appeal of having formerly graced the Château at Ancy-le-Franc. On the other hand, they made only half that price when they were sold at the Hotel Drouot last June.

While it is safe to assume that the Monte

by Paul Overv

ONDON - The Victoria and Albert Museum has finally gone to work sorting out its more than 300,000 photographs - one of the world's finest collections — and put together a show that hints at its riches. The exhibition, which has been touring Britain, is now at the V&A itself through Oct. 4.

It is only recently that proper curatorial staff has been employed to catalogue the col-lection, which is part of the museum's Prints and Drawings department. It will eventually be rehoused in the V&A's Cole building, which is now being restored, with exhibition facilities

The 58 photographs have been chosen by Mark Haworth-Booth, assistant keeper in charge of photographs, and range from a Hill and Adamson calotype of the 1840s to contem-porary works. The sample includes landscapes, portraits, nudes, still lifes, architectural picares and photojournalism. Wherever possible original prints, not later copies, are exhibited, although there are some inevitable exceptions.

The finest of the early photographs are by Roger Fenton, the British photographer best known for his Crimean War pictures. In the catalogue Haworth-Booth is defensive about his inclusion of war photographs — the muse-um took a lot of criticism recently for exhibiting Don McCullin's war photographs as if they were art objects.

In Fenton's day equipment was too cumbersome and slow to photograph battles in prog-ress. But his famous picture of "The Valley of the Shadow of Death" — the scene of the no-torious Charge of the Light Brigade where British troops were destroyed by the Russians in an action of suicidal folly — which shows only the hare terrain litteed with converonly the bare terrain littered with cannonballs, not a corpse in sight, is a masterpiece of imaginative understatement.

Also included are two more of Fenton's Crimean photographs, "Landing Place, Railway Siores, Balaklava" and a telling posed study of the British, French and Turkish commanders, Lord Ragian, Gen. Pelissier and Omar Pasha,
"The Council of War." Fenton was also an exeptionally fine landscape photographer. His river study, "Up the Hodder, Near Stonyhurst" in 1858 is one of the best pictures in

There are also four recently acquired prints by Robert Howlett of Brunel's ship Great Eastern under construction and his superb portrait of Brunel himself in 1857, standing against a background of gigantic chains, hands sinck into the pockets of his muddled trousers, stove-pipe hat at a rakish angle, cigar screwed

Brassai's photograph of Matisse with his model was taken in 1939.

Julia Margaret Cameron's portrait of the astronomer Sir John Herschel is also well-known. But Cameron insisted that this "very unassuming" man should look the haunted, inspired genius and lit him melodramatically so that he looks like an actor playing the part. Two other Cameron photographs, Miss Mary Hillier got up as "Sappho" and "The Dream," are sentimental in the style of Victorian paint-

There are some magnificent specimens of architectural photography, including Edouard Baldus' salt print of The Royal Portal, Chartres Cathedral" and a fine albumen print by Fenton of Rievanla Abbey in Yorkshire where one is suddenly pulled up by the figure of a girl, which reveals the unexpected scale of the ruins. A later architectural picture by Frederick Evans from the 1890s is in quite a different style, but equally exceptional.

There are memorable works by Atget, Stieglitz and Strand but the choice of 20thcentury work seems less sure than that of the 19th. There is a stress on the fine art and aesthetic aspect of photography. Even documentary photographs seem chosen mainly for their pictorial values, like Engene Smith's picture of a Japanese mother with her son hideonaly malformed as a result of mercury poisoning. But Brassai's picture of Matisse drawing a mude model, looking like an elderly gynecologist in his white coat, is superb.

London now has a variety of photography galleries, from the new Contrasts Gallery (19, Dovers Street, W1), which presents expensive prints rather preciously as fine art objects, to the documentary Half Moon Gallery, which will shortly reopen in Roman Road in the East End of London. Occupying the middle ground is the Photographers Gallery (5 & 8 Great Newport Street, WCZ), the oldest photographic gallery in London, which expanded into adjacent premises last year and presents a pro-gram of several shows simultaneously. Currently it is exhibiting Marc Riboud's pictures of China, Horace Nicholls' wonderfully sympathetic photographs including those of women doing war work in Britain during World War I, Jurgen Schadeberg's pictures of South Africa and Britain, and Mike Eldridge's color photographs of the West Coast.

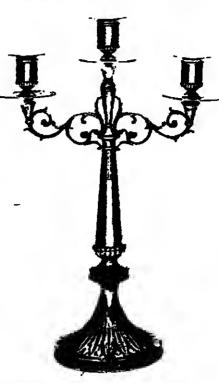

same direction. At Sotheby's big annual boliday sale, held at Gleneagles Hotel near Edin-burgh on Aug. 31, Victorian silver of the most banal and ponderous type did reasonably well, if closer to the lower, than the upper, estimate. An uninspired pair of three-light candelabra with detachable sconces in the composite style halfway between Neoclassicism and Baroque was knocked down at £550. A three-piece tea set made in Edinburgh in 1878 and a matching coffee pot made in London the year before sold for £935. Neither lot was particularly expensive but, then, neither would have justified the slightest display of enthusiasm.

Competition was more intense over a

Candelabra sold at Gleneagles.

George II teapot by Alexander Johnston of Dundee which soared to £6,050, two and a half times the upper estimate.

Next day, at the session devoted to Victorian painting, the verdict remained unchanged: There are buyers willing to pay the price, and even more than that, for banal works of art of a conventional order. A Scottish landscape by Alexander Nasmyth done around 1860-70 in a picture-postcard style went up to a comfortable £6,690.

Leading auction houses are adjusting to the new mood even though they are keeping quiet about it. An early sign of a scaling-down of expectations may be read in the reduced size of the usual autumn round of Islamic sales at Sotheby's in London — which is far ahead of its competitors in this field. Two sessions will be devoted to manuscripts, one to works of art and in both categories the standard will be lower than last season, according to professional sources.

More positively, English auction houses are making a noticeable effort to step up sales in the lower end of the market, where they keep improving their methods. Christie's was the first to organize "cheap" sales when it took over Debenham's at 85 Old Brompton Road and converted it into "Christie's South Kensington." There they handle goods that selfrespecting auction houses wouldn't have considered for a second six or seven years ago. These range from unimportant or even non-descript 19th-century watercolors to run-of-the-mili furniture, pot lids etc. The stroke of genius was to take this seriously, catalogue them tersely with two-to-three-line entries, and cut down overhead by simpli-fying the whole auction procedure. The public reacted enthusiastically. This season there is a noticeable effort to make the catalogues look better — some now have illustrations and even printed estimates - and there are "specialist sales." Last week, there was a "sale of scientific instruments, weights and measures, and other domestic machines." And on Sept. 17 there will be a "sale of tools of the carpenter and craftsmen" - from planes of every description to "an American Cooestoga wagon-jack dated 1867."

For its part, Sotheby's has only just started to compete in this line with its "fast sale service" inaugurated in July. It is a barely modified version of Christie's South Kensingtoo auctions.

A new effort in the line of middle-range sales is Sotheby's trend toward increasing "house sales" in which the full contents of country houses are sold on the premises. These would often not justify the effort of a sale in London with all the transportation and insurance costs involved. On the other hand, modest wares retain greater charm in their own setting. This month alone there will be five such house sales, from Hay House in Warwickshire oo Tuesday 10 Amberley Castle in West Sussex on Sept. 30.

From the auctioneer's angle as much as from the buyer's, the new mood seems to be one of thrift and reserve.

From Symbolist Salon to Museum

by Ann Pinkerton

T. GERMAIN-EN-LAYE, France -The artists who took art beyond Impressionism and started its evolution toward 20th-century modern art aren't always appreciated for their foresight.

That's what's special about a visit to the year-old Le Prieure museum in the Paris suburb of Saint-Germain-en-Laye, which brings to life the former home and atelier of Manrice Denis, the turn-of-the-century meeting place for his salon of Symbolist artists called the Nabis (or prophets). This clamish group of about 12, including Bonnard, Vuillard, Ranson, Lacombe, Sérusier, Verkade and Vallot-ton, would often gather in the lush gardens and large rooms of Le Prieure during the 10 years the members of the group inspired each of Maurice Denis and his family, it provided other. While the Nabis may or may not be familiar, the origins of styles now well known in for his artist friends with its tall windows, spa-

Art Nouveau, Expressionism, Fauvism, Surre-alism and other forms of modern art are easily recognizable in their work.

The Denis mansion is not without a history of its own. This grand but austere bulding that served as Maurice Denis' residence was built in the early 1680s by Françoise Athénais de Rochechouart-Montemart, the Marquise de Montespan, with money from Louis XIV for use as a hospital and home for the poor and. homeless. It seems that la Marquise, a favorite of the king and mother of eight of his children, was obliged to leave the court after he lost in-terest in her.

The building served as a General Royal Hospital for a number of years. The Jesuits owned it as a retirement home before the separation of church and state when it was returned to personal ownership. As the property of Maurice Denis and his family, it provided what must have been a supportive atmosphere

cious, sunny rooms, high wood-beam ceilings, chapel, atcher and gardens. Le Prieure was Denis' name for the building and the name kept by the Denis family when they bought it back a few years ago to turn into a museum. It houses a permanent collection of more than 1,200 pieces, approximately 950 of which are those of Maurice Denis and 250 of his friends or contemporaries. The library has more than 10,000 of Denis' letters and documents as well as books on the period.

Encouraged by the ideas of Paul Gauguin and Japanese art, the Nabi group took the Symbolist ideas of the time and developed a style that was neither figurative nor literal, had no perspective and was created from memory without the use of models.

Just as the Impressionists explored a new way of treating light with color and brush strokes, the Nabis worked with fla forms and an expressive use of color and lines to show internal emotions.

The Nabis thought art should be present in everyday life and not just confined to a frame on the wall. They translated their talent into everything from posters and vases to the overall decor of a room. Denis himself designed houses and theatres. Examples of this application of the art of the period can be seen in the museum: Jacques Gruber's and Denis' stainedglass windows, Alphonse Mucha's posters, Denis' wallpaper and on the third floor, litho-graphs, models for churches and theatres, ceramic plates and bowls, fans, book illustrations and vases. Also on display are the stage sets, marionettes and costume designs that Denis and others of his group created for their own entertainment.

Denis obviously amused himself decorating the chapel attached to Le Prieure, its ceiling painted over with blue skies, clouds and doves.

Several murals and a brightly colored stainedglass window help the chapel's atmosphere.

The Nabi artists not only expanded their art into daily objects, but also associated with and developed projects with masters in other art forms. Composers Claude Debussy and Cesar Franc, writer André Gide and the architect Anguste Perret were among the friends of Denis, all spokesmen for the thinking of their time. The museum's collection includes the work of artists related to but outside the Nabi circle — for example, the sculptures by An-toine Bourdelle, Aristide Maillol and Jean Arp that stand in the garden and halls. The museum is open every day except Monday and Tuesday. It's a 20-minute train ride on the RER from the Etoile in Paris to the Saint-Germain-en-Laye station. A short walk leads directly to the museum: Turn right after the station and left on rue au Pain, which becomes rue Bon-

The exhibition opened at Corning in the spring of 1979 and has since been traveling around the United States. Pilkington, the Eng-United States. Fillington, the English glassmakers and the largest glass company in the world, is oow sponsoring the exhibition in England ("New Giass: A Worldwide Survey," Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, London SW7, to Oct. 11), and as a bonus for English victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, London SW7, to Oct. 11), and as a bonus for English viewers is showing 22 pieces of very recent British glass.

What immediately strikes the visitor to the show is the multiplic-by Sandra Milsud and "Belfast afity of uses to which glass is now being put. Although well over half the exhibition is of "useful" wares — vases, drinking glasses, bowls, disbes — no more than 40 pieces can be said to be orthodox wares, and even these are mostly of beautiful shape or splendid color.

In the main, the useful wares may aiready be considered works of art — such as the black glass cups with molded and polished handles by Jonathan Block (United States); the bowl entitled "Dream Fantasy" in blown leadglass with complex sandblasted decoration by Ray Flavell (Britain); the snap-glasses with color-decorated stems by Jesper Kerrn-Jespersen (Denmark); the "Four Seasons" dishes of Laura de Santillana (Italy) and the handpressed crystal dishes with sandblasted decoration by Saburo Funakoshi (Japan).

As for glass sculpture, of which there are more than 100 examples. it is difficult to know where to begin. Blanka Adensamova (Czechoslovakia) presents an Art Deco female head in enameled and en-graved glass. Joaquin Torres Esta-ban (Spain) in "Volumenes" has created a laminated green glass cube, cut and fractured in such a manner as to suggest a leaf-veined universe. By cutting and cementing ordinary plate glass, Heidi Astrid Betz-Schlierer (West Germany) has made a large "Sparkling Star."

John Cook (Britain) has made images of the giraffe-necked ladies of the East in sandcast, colorless glass. Jiri Suhajek (Czechoslova-kia) makes abstract but anthropomorphic sculptures in plain and blue-tinted glass. "Wotan's Oak Tree" is presented in poured, shaped glass by Peter Kaspar (West Germany), while "Nike" by Maria Meszaros (Hungary) personifies classical beauty in a plate place town.

The sculptural qualities of useful wares and glass as a versatile medium for "pure" sculpture are equally impressive in the added British section — notably in "Three Bowls" by Sandra Bowden; the "Sahara Cactus" and "Lesotho ter Pollainolo" by the young sculp-tor Clifford Rainey, in which he personifies the chief city of Northern Ireland as a martyred St. Sebastian.

Let the great lexicographer, Dr. Samuel Johnson, have the last word. Writing of the first man to make glass, and all that stemmed from that half-accidental discov-ery, Johnson avers that this "first artificer of glass was facilitating and prolonging the enjoyment of light, enlarging the avenues of sci-ence, and conferring the highest

by AL in Dale Olson

URZBURG, West Germany - A 15th-century woodcarver has be-come a big tourist attraction in this part of Bavaria, so big that a collection of most of his works will go on disway in the Mainfränkische Museum in Würzburg from this weekend until Nov. 1. Würzburg is the site of this exhibition of the works of Tillman Riemenschneider, planned to nark the 450th anniversary of his death, beause it was his adopted home and its museims and churches already house Germany's argest assembly of his works in one location. He was a successful businessman in Würzburg in the early 1500s, establishing a arge and profitable woodcarving school and vorkshop. He served on the city council and as ord mayor before the city turned on him, hishonoring him as a traitor and confining him a his last days to the fortress that today proects his finest work.

Dr. Hans-Peter Trenschel, curator of the Würzburg Museum and moving force behind he exhibition, explains that it will focus on tiemenschneider's earliest work. "We are toking at the period from 1485, when he first pened his workshop here, until 1490, the year to began Adam and Fin for the Marianten." to began Adam and Eve for the Marienkapelle and established his reputation." He turned out a lot of work in those early with sculpture experts from the Prussian State Museum in Berlin to collect pieces for this show. "This show will teach the public more about Riemenschneider than is known about any other sculptor of Gothic or Late-Gothic times," Trenschei says.

"From his death on July 7, 1531, till the accidental rediscovery of his gravestone by street workers in 1822, he and his works had been largely forgotten. For 160 years now, scholars have been redix overing him, and at last we can put together a complete picture of his life and work."

His work has become well known, but what of his life? Little is known other than that he was born in the Harz Mountains, probably in Osterode, that he moved at a young age to Würzburg and that he found favor with the bishops, the nobility and the town council. In 1515 he was elected to the Würzburg council and in 1520 he was elected lord mayor. Five years later, things went wrong.

Peasants all over Europe were in revolt, and in Germany the revolution was especially cru-el; between 1524 and 1526, clashes between peasant armies and those of noblemen and churchmen were frequent and bloody. As an important bishopric headed by prelates who were also princes, Wiirzburg harbored little sympathy for peasants' concerns.

The peasant armies were easily turned back at the walls of Marienberg Fortress, the imposing home of the bishops. Lord Mayor Riemenschneider, however, dared to state that the peasants had some cause to seek redress. Consequently he was stripped of his office, declared a traitor, imprisoned in the fortress and further punished by having both his hands broken so that he could never carve again. Six later, in 1531, he died alone.

But whatever dishonor the city thrust upon Riemenschneider, it today considers him its greatest citizen. His work is lyrical, expressive, as emotional in 1981 as it was in the 16th century. He was a craftsman of the highest order; his work — whether in stone, alabaster or wood - overlooks no wrinkle, no fold, no nuance of a smile or suggestion of a tear. He did not gild or paint his work. Every chisel mark, every knife out speaks for itself.

The exhibition includes the carving of St Hieronymus from the Museum of Art in Cleveland, the Riemenschneider fragment from the Metropolitian Museum of Art in New York, and two great altar pieces — the 10-meter-high St. Mary's Altar from the Herrgottskirche in Creglingen and the Altar of the Holy Blood from the Franciscan Church in Rothenburg on the Tauber.

The Riemenschneider exhibition, Sept. 5 to Nov. 11, is open daily from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

U.S. Wholesale Prices Rose 0.3% in August

From Agency Dispatches
WASHINGTON — U.S. wholesale prices, aided by a small increase in food costs, rose by 0.3 percentage points in August, an annual rate of 3.6 percent, the Labor Department said Friday. It was the smallest monthly increase since May.

At the same time, the govern-ment reported that unemployment edged up to 7.2 percent in August after declining to 7 percent in July. The increase was attributed largely to a surge in the number of black teen-agers out of work.

The government said its increase in wholesale prices — measured by the producer price index for finished goods — was less than July's 0.4-percent advance. cent advance.

Since last August, wholesale prices have risen 7.9 percent, a sharp decline from the 11.8 percent for all of 1980.

Inflation at the wholesale level is running at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 8.3 percent for the first eight months of this year, La-bor Department officials said. If inflation increased at August's rate for 12 consecutive months, the rate for that year would be 3.6 per-cent, the officials said. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the administration is encouraged by the smaller-than-expected rise in the Producer Price

Index for August.
"We continue to be encouraged by progress in bringing inflation under control," Mr. Speakes said. But be cautioned against putting too much emphasis on the August figure, saying undue reliance should not be placed on a single month. The Labor Department report said consumer food prices in-creased only 0.2 percentage points in August, much less than the 1.5

percent rise in July.

Prices for finished energy goods dropped 0.7 percent, the third decline in the last four months. July's decrease was 1 percent. Gasoline prices continued falling in August, declining 1.6 percent, the fourth consecutive monthly drop, the report said. Prices for home heating oil were down 0.7 percent after a 2-percent drop in July.

Swiss Price Index Up 1.5%

BERN — The Swiss consumer price index rose 1.5 percent in August, to an annual rate of 7.4 percent, the Federal Office for Industry, Trade and Labor said Friday. In July, the index rose by 0.6 percent, for a year-on-year gain of 6.6 percent.

In a companion report, the Labor Department said unemployment edged up to 7.2 percent in August. July's 7 percent jobless rate was the lowest level since 7.3 April, 1980. The rate had been 7.3 percent in June, 7.6 percent in May and 7.3 percent in the previous three months.

Janet Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said the jobless rate for blacks went up sharply last month.

"Much of the increase in the black rate took place among teen-agers whose jobless rate — at 45.7 percent — was three times the rate for white teen-agers," she said.

Most analysts bad predicted the inhibitors and predicted the jobless rate would rise to 7.2 per-cent after July's unexpected drop, reflecting more people in the labor force as well as some increase in the number of unemployed.

helped Japan's economy expand by 1.2 percent between April and the growth in the year had made a DETROIT - Spurred by re June, putting it on target for growth of more than 5 percent in the current fiscal year, official figures showed Friday. The statistics released by the Economic Planning Agency will al-most certainly increase pressure on Japan to boost imports to prevent further trade friction with other major industrial nations.

A surge in exports coupled with only a slow gain in imports made a big contribution to Japan's economic growth in the quarter, the first of the current fiscal year, EPA officials said.

The 1.2 percent increase in real gross national product compared with a 1.1 percent increase in the previous quarter and is equivalent to a 5.1 percent increase at an annual rate. This would be the fastest growth rate in a major industrialized nation. Last year's growth, which was 5 percent when mea-sured at 1970 prices, would have been 3.8 percent based on 1975

INFILTRATION By Albert Speer

Translated from the German by Joachim Neugroschel. 604 pp. $15. Macmillan, 866 Third Avenue, New York 10022.

Reviewed by Alden Whitman

FOR the third time in 10 years Al-hert Speer, Hitler's personal ar-chitect and minister of armaments beat their breasts. and war production, has written a book in which he has striven to minimize — or at feast blunt the edge of — the war crimes for which he was convicted at Nuremberg in 1946.

At that celebrated trial, Speer offered a daring defense — an admission of guilt for using slave-fabor hattalions in his factories and for collabconting with the SS in according conorating with the SS in accepting concentration camp prisoners. Speer (who died Tuesday in London) insisted that he had ameliorated conditions of his slave laborers, mostly Jews, and that in any case the Nazis' crimes against humanity were due to Hitler's misuse of modern technology.

Viewing Speer as a technocrat, the Allied judges, with the Soviet Union dissenting, gave him 20 years in Spandau, along with Rudolf Hess, Grand Admiral Erieh Raeder, Grand Admiral Erieh Raeder, Grand Admiral Erieh Raeder, Grand Admirater of the Speech Raeder, Grand Raeder, ral Karl Doenitz, Walther Funk and Baldur von Schirach. On leaving the slammer, Speer wrote "Inside the Third Reich," an apologia for his be-havior, also he asked us to understand how captivating Hitler could be when he turned on the charm.

A second book five years ago, "Spandau," asked us to feel sorry for him because prison life was so boring for a person of his intellect.

Now comes "Infiltration," a detailed account of his service as minister of armaments and war production: In it he has sought to demonstrate that Heinrich Himmler, the SS leader, was the evil genius who decided upon using slave labor for work in arms factories to be built near concentration camps. Speer shows how the Nazis' top leadership was riven by intrigue and how dependent it felt on Hitler's good will. His book, often turgid, reads like a lawyer's documented brief for acquittal.

Lost to the "Labor Process"

Speer again performs an act of atonement. "Until the fall of 1944 I was one of those who put all qualms aside when the needs of the war demanded it. Also I was so deeply in Hitler's thrall that I would have sup-pressed any comment merely because of a look of disapproval in his face," he writes, adding: "Yet . . . for me, the tens of thousands who disappeared into the ghettoes [he means the concentration camps] were lost to the labor process. . . Today, almost 40 years later, I grow dizzy when I recall that the number of manufactured tanks seems to have been more important to me than the vanished victims of rac-These tears do not strike me as coming from the heart, and all the more because earlier in the book he has made a hig point of saying how much a part of the machine he was, having joined the Nazi Party in 1931 and having been buddy buddy with Hitler in the intervening years. Since the book's publishers offer rather little books. the historical background on Speer, the reader is left on his own.

Crocodile Tears

Given the rise of neo-Nazism and the Hitler cult on the fringes of the right wing in the United States, I have problems with Hitler-era books that butter over the abominations. Particularly, i dislike seeing war criminals

Speer, had he not just died, would have made something from "Infiltra-tion"; the publisher will make something too. Would it be out of line to suggest that their profits be used to further study of the Holocaust?

"Infiltration" is a disingenuous ex-ercise in saying, "Don't hlame Speer too much, just consider how dreadful Himmler was." It is a falling-out of gangsters, interesting as sociopathology, but still hlind as history.

Alden Whitman is editor of "American Reformers," a biographical dictionary. He wrote this review for the Los Angeles Times.

U.S. Publisher To Issue Two Indian Novels

By Edwin McDowell

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — This fall, the University of Chicago Press plans to pub-lish "Waiting for the Mahatma" and "The Financial Expert," bringing to seven the number of novels it will have published by R.K. Narayan. That represents a sizable portion of the 25 novels and stories in English written by the Indian author during the past 46 years.

Rasipuran Krishnaswami Narayan is not exactly unknown in the United States; over the years his books have been published by the Viking Press, by Farrar, Straus & Giroux's Noonday paperback imprint and by Michigan State University Press. Nevertheless, it is probably fair to say that for all his privile probably fair to say that for all his critical acclaim, he is less known than his countryman Ved Mehta, or than such English writers about India as Rudyard Kipling, E.M. Forster or, more recently, M. M.

Kaye.
So why, then, has Chicago published his books. "Morris Philipson, Chicago's director, was in London when he read an article about Naray-an by Graham Greene, which appeared in The Times of London in October, 1978," said Ann Barret, advertising and publicity manager of the press, Greene had helped find a publisher for Narayan's first book, "Swami," which had been rejected a half-dozen times. That marked the beginning of Narayan's literary career and of his principal creation, Malgu-

Malgudi is to Narayan what Ma-condo is to Gabriel Garcia Marquez — an imaginary town peopled by an endless cast of characters. A reporter endless cast of characters. A reporter interviewing Narayan in India in 1958 wrote that Malgudi, although it exists on no map, is the "center of India's English-language literary life" and that the Malgudi books taken together "are just about the best picture of life in India available in English."

That was 23 years and 15 books ago, and since then the town "has grown from book to book and moved.

Philadelphia (2-2) at N.Y. Giants (2-2) - The battered Giants approach this campaign warily. The linebacking and receiver corps are the only positions where the team seems competitive. The Giants last beat the Eagles in a home game in 1972. The Eagles will rely on excellent defense in the early weeks while the offense assimilates a new fullback — Perry Harrington or a rookie, Hubert Oliver — and the ing any rhythm.

Riding his booming serve, topseeded John McEnroe advanced with a 6-3, 6-1, 6-3 victory over Tom Guillisson. Third-seeded Ivan new guards, Ron Baker and Steve Kenney. Philadelphia by 6.

Dallas (2-2) at Washington (3-1) The Redskins have 22 new players, 12 of whom have never played in an NFL game, and 10 new starters, 8 on offense. The Cowboys hope their new defensive backfield is set with rookie Mike Downs at safety and Dennis Thurman now playing cornerback. Steve Wilson and Charlie Waters complete the quartet. Dallas teams have won their last 16 straight opening games Dallas by 2.

New Orleans (3-1) at Atlanta (2-3) — The Saints have many new faces, including five probable starters on a defense that needed wholesale improvements. Early games could be disastrous. The Falcons were sluggish in preseason and could not run the ball. Steve Bartkowski, the quarterback, has a sore wrist on his passing arm and is listed as questionable. Mike Moroski, a rookie and 12th round draft choice, is the alternative. At-

San Francisco (2-2) at Detroit (1-3) — The Improved 49ers hope to burn some complacent rivals. Coach Bill Walsh settled on Ricky Patton, fourth-year-pro, as replace-ment at running back for injured Paul Hofer. A free agent, Vince Thompson, starts at fullback for Lions in place of Dexter Bussey.

Detroit by 4½. Green Bay (3-1) at Chicago (2-2) - The Bears could have a splendid team. The Packers expect to score more often, but how are they going to stop anyone? They do begin with four healthy linebackers after having to use 14 last season. Chicago by 4.

Minnesota (1-3) at Tampa Bay (1-3) — Tommy Kramer, the quarterback, has strained knee ligaments, so Steve Dils will start for the Vikings. He did well in cameo appearances last season. Tony Galbreath, the new fullback from the Saints, is questionable with bad thigh. The Buccaneers set their defense this week, although Hugh Green, the first draft choice, became a regular the first day of Interconference Houston (1-3) at Los Angeles (2-2) — Ken Stabler will be the start-ing quarterback for the Oilers. If he wears out, John Reaves will take over. Stabler did well in the final preseason game against Dallas two days after reporting. Coach Ed Biles' new offense seems rough and uncertain with Leon Gray, still handicapped by injury, at left tackle. The Rams seem ready for the Super Bowl. Cullen Bryant and Wendell Tyler are the starting running backs with Preston Dennard and Billy Waddy as wide receivers. Pat Haden says it's a pleasure to quarterback this team. Los Auge-

Doctors Climbing Everest to Set Up Oxygen-Test Lab

United Press International KATMANDU - An expedition of U.S. doctors is preparing to climb Mount Everest not because it is there but to set up the world's highest medical laboratory. The Nepal Ministry of Tourism said Friday the group set up base camp at 17,500 feet (5,303 meters).

The medical expedition is composed of 12 doctors and nine assistants. With their 12 tons of equipment, they intend to conduct the first extensive tests on oxygen intake and barometric temperatures done on Everest in a laboratory at 26,246 feet (7,953 meters).

"The study will belp us improve the management of patients with heart and lung diseases since most such diseases are caused by the low level of oxygen in the body. " said Dr. John. B. West of San Diego. Calif., the expedition leader.

over a couple of AWACS planes to protect the Saudis.

"What are those?" a member of the Saudi royal family asked a U.S.
Air Force sergeant in Riyadh.
The Air Force sergeant said
proudly. "Those are U.S. AWACS, which happen to be the latest thing in aerial warfare. You can fight an entire war and watch an in-flight

"They're not for sale." the Air Force sergeant said.

"I've never known a weapon the U.S. made that wasn't for sale. If we don't get our AWACS, we're upping the price of our oil two dollars a barrel, and taking all our de-posits out of the Chase Manhattan Christmas fund."

The Air Force sergeant passed on the conversation to the U.S. ambassador in Saudi Arabia, who passed it on to Washington, who bucked it up to the White House.

The National Security Council debated the issue. One member said, "If we sell the Saudis the AWACS we can recycle most of the money we're paying for Saudi Arabian crude."

"But if something happens to the royal family," another member the NSC warned, "then the AWACS could fall into unfriendly hands and the Soviets would know all our secreis."

A third member said, "And let's not forget the Israelis. They'll feel threatened by the AWACS and we'll have to give them 12 Stealth bombers that aren't off the drawing boards yet."

Someone put in a call to President Reagan. "Mr. President, how do you feel DYE 3 BASE Greenland — An international team of scientists is reading, in six-foot cylinders of ice, the story of the snows that fell when Cro-Magnon artists were painting the images of prehis-toric animals on the walls of French caves.

In a highly elaborate and sophisticated experiment, the scientists have drilled almost to the bottom of the Greenland ice sheet, extracting remnants of the snows that built the great mass of ice that builtdozed the Northern Hemisphere more than 60,000 years ago.

They have now penetrated to 6,687 feet and are drilling through ice made milky by rock 'flour." ground from the bedrock by the enormous burden of creeping ice. Earlier, at a depth of 6,455 feet, they penetrated a silty layer perhaps scraped off some summit.

off some summit. Then 130 feet of clear ice was drilled before reaching the milky layer. The scientists said they expect to hit bottom very soon, where the ice may date back 100,000 years to a warm period before the last Ice Age. Hidden in the deep layers of ice are samples of the earth's ancient atmosphere. clues to volcanic and climatic factors that led to past ice ages and that could set the stage for a new one.

From these ice samples and those retrieved in earlier, shallower efforts, scientists have reconstructed the most complete history to date of global volcanic activity over the past 10,000 years.

They believe it explains wby, according to European accounts, the sun and moon appeared "reddish, faint and lacked hrilliance" throughout 1601 and 1602. Ice formed from snows that fell in 1601 and 1602 shows sharp peaks in acidity attributed to sulfuric acid from major volcanic penhagen who have reconstructed this his-tory believe that, since these two crup-tions were not recorded historically, they occurred in some remote, high latitude region such as Kamchatka or the Aleutians.

Researchers from the University of Co-

A particularly large eruption produced three years of acidic fallout on Greenland about 50 B.C. Accounts of a dimming of the sun after Julius Caesar was assassinated in 44 B.C. are reported in the writings of Virgil and Pliny the Elder.

The drilling, near Dye 3, a radar station 8.700 feet above sea level in southern Greenland, is a joint American-Danish-Swiss effort, with scientists from Iceland and Japan also participating.

Like the North Sea drilling platforms it is a community on stilts, with extensive living quarters, dining facilities and recreation rooms. Every few years it is backed higher on its stilts to keep it above the accumulating snow.

Frigid Laboratories

As soon as ice samples from great depths reach the surface they begin to un-dergo decompression changes. Therefore the cores, instead of being airlifted to distant laboratories, as in earlier drilling projects, are being examined in a complex of frigid, subsurface laboratories carved out of the ice.

The chambers are linked by tunnels whose walls and ceilings glitter with crystals formed from the humidity exhaled by passing researchers

In these laboratories a number of discoveries, some of them perplexing, have been made. It has been found, for example, that the snows that fell on central Greenland throughout the final third of the last ice age were heavily laden with dust. Then, within less than 20 years as the ice age ended, the dust vanished.

The dust, it is proposed, may have been volcanic or may have blown from vast continental shelves off Siberia and other northern coasts. Such shelves were laid hare as sea levels were lowered when much of the world's water was locked in ice sheets. As the ice meited and sea levels rose these areas might have been flooded within a few years.

Volcanic Activity

Willi Dansgaard, one of the Danish scientists at Dye 3, believes the volcanic record explains a puzzle: the discovery with airborne radar of layering deep within the ice that extends across much of Greenland. It has now been shown by the drilling, he said, that the layers coincide with periods of intense volcanic activity.

Dansgaard has played a leading role in using relative abundances of two forms of oxygen for counting ice layers like annual growth rings. Oxygen comes in two forms or isotopes: oxygen 16 and oxygen 18. The latter is slightly heavier because its nuclei contain two more neutrons.

As weather becomes colder, water containing oxygen 18 is less likely to precipitate. Therefore winter snow contains relatively little oxygen 18.

At Dye 3 where several feet of snow accumulates each year, the annual summer-winter cycles can be traced through the relative abundances of these two forms of oxygen.

Annual layers for the past nine centu-ries pinpoint dates of volcanic eruptions with an error margin of only one year. The uncertainty in ice 14 centuries old is three years.

An effort has been made to find evidence of the volcanic explosion at Thera (Santorin), in the Aegean Sea, that some say formed the basis for the Atlantis legend and perhaps contributed to the downfall of the Minoan civilization. The only large eruption in that period, from Il 10 to 2700 B.C., shows up at about 1390 B.C. with an error margin of 50 years.

It appears that at least seven great erup-tions occurred from 7000 B.C. to 8000 B.C., but where is unknown. Earlier than about 8000 B.C. it becomes difficult to identify the annual layers, but ages can be roughly estimated.

Climate Trends

The oxygen ratios also indicate longterm climate trends. A period of warming when birch trees reappeared briefly in Denmark in the midst of the last ice age is evident in layers put down II,000 to 11,800 years ago. Another aid in year counting and assessment of previous climate has been the percentage of each annual layer showing signs of summer melting. Michael M. Herron, his wife, Susan, and Chester C. Langway Jr: of the State University of New York at Buffalo have found that such layering can be followed 2,200 years into Langway, chairman of the geology department at the university, is the senior American scientist for the Greenland drilling, Karl C. Kuivinen of the Universi-ty of Nebraska at Lincoln is the operational leader.

The summer melts indicate that it was particularly warm from A.D. 950 to 1400, when the Vikings prospered on the nearby Greenland coast. According to the Herrons, in the so-called Little Ice Age in Enrope and North America it was colder than normal in Greenland but not radical-an ice sheet has been at Byrd Station in

A major challenge at Dye 3 is finding a way to "read" the timetable of changes hidden in lower layers of the ice. In storage here and in Buffalo, where most of the ice is eventually flown, is a priceless record of past climate, changes in atmospheric chemistry, volcanic eruptions and other events. The layers, however, became so thin near the bottom that they are seemingly indistinguishable. The deeper ice is too old for estimating ages from its carbon 14
